All Good

Eva Trobisch’s stunning debut is a complex character study of a strong willed woman, Janne, anchored by a mesmerising central performance from Aenne Schwarz. Janne’s attitude is ‘if you don’t see any problems, you don’t have any’, even though her new boss’s brother-in-law sleeps with her against her will. The film adopts a gripping, first person perspective as she ploughs on with her life, keeping the incident under wraps though unforeseen problems beset her from every direction threatening all her relationships and her work life one after the other.

‘At what point does defiance twist into denial? This is the fine precipice on which German writer-director Eva Trobisch’s searing debut feature “All Good” balances its frayed-nerve drama... A fascinating flip on themes contentiously raised in Paul Verhoeven’s “Elle,” underpinned by a breakout performance of raw candor by Aenne Schwarz, this is grown-up filmmaking of sharp, subtle daring.’ Variety

Arctic

Brazilian YouTube phenomenon Joe Penna makes his feature debut with a bold, almost dialogue-free drama about one man’s solo fight for survival in the Arctic. Mads Mikkelsen rises to the challenge of playing the film’s only lead role with an intense, captivating performance as a downed airman waiting for rescue while trying to stay alive in the most desperate circumstances. The stunning landscape of Iceland, cast as the film’s polar setting, features throughout. ‘Arctic is stark and visceral, stripped of any distracting elements, and for the survival movie purist, it’s an artful entry into the genre.’ (Vox)

‘Nothing brings home the fragility of a human quite as starkly as the sight of a mere dot, tramping through an endless ocean of white snow. Nothing represents survival quite as vividly as an individual, slog­ging through a howling gale, barely visible through heavy spindrift...A parable of man against nature, yes: but also a story about the endurance of altruism under extreme circumstances.’ Joe Penna, Director.
After his breakout performance in Call Me By Your Name, Timothée Chalamet returns to form with another dazzling performance in Beautiful Boy. Based on complementary memoirs by father and son David and Nic Sheff, Felix van Groeningen’s film intimately chronicles the relationship between a troubled young drug addict and the father desperately trying to reconnect with him – played with incredible force by Steve Carell. The film is both heartbreaking and inspiring in its depiction of survival and recovery in a family coping with addiction over many years.

“We like to think that we have control, and on some level, we do. But life is weirder and stranger and bigger than our plans, and we have to be okay with that too. That is what this film is ultimately about, I think. We have to accept that life is not black and white. It’s grey, and we have to embrace it.” Felix van Groeningen, Director

In remote Columbia a peaceful Indigenous clan is disrupted by the chance to get rich quick. This visually spectacular crime saga is set over a 12-year period and begins with arrogant young bachelor Acosta asking to marry the daughter of the clan matriarch. But Acosta is set a high cash price and to gather the money he does something that’s taboo – a trade deal with drug-running ‘Gringo’ outsiders. A visionary, thrilling film from the director of Embrace of the Serpent. Part gangster flick, part exploration of First Peoples’ cultures, Birds of Passage is like absolutely nothing else.

“We wanted to tell the history of a community and its total destruction. We didn’t want to glorify the drug trade, to say these are the good people and these are the bad people, because there’s nothing they could do to avoid their tragic destiny.” Cristina Gallego, Co-Director

The new film from leading Korean director Lee Chang-dong (Oasis, Poetry) took eight years to arrive but it was more than worth the wait, stunning critics at Cannes Film Festival this year. A beautifully-crafted mystery thriller based on a short story about obsessive love by Haruki Murakami, Burning starts out as a story about a deliveryman who cares for his girlfriend’s cat while she goes away to Africa. Then she returns with a stranger. ‘Once again, Lee has crafted a film of wondrous complexity and inscrutability. The more we see in Burning, the less sure we are of what we are watching.’ (Screen International)

‘For a long time, I’ve wanted to tell a story about young people, and in particular, the young people of this generation... people all over the world, regardless of their nationality, religion, and social status, are angry for different reasons...they feel a sense of debilitation. This film is about young people who feel impotent, with rage bottled up inside them.’ Lee Chang-dong, Director.

Zain, a boy of around 12 stands up in court and declares that he wishes to sue his parents. What could have led him to this point? Flashing back, we learn that his family has become overwhelmed – too many kids, not enough love – and that Zain has been living on the streets, eking out a life not just for him but for another young soul as well. This rousing, realist Beirut-set street epic, the winner of the Jury Prize at this year’s Cannes Film Festival, packs an enthralling and emotional wallop.

‘I think I’m not the only person being moved by the sight of all these children that we see everywhere, and it’s a problem that we see in all the big cities in the world with these economic and refugee crises, and the number of children in child labor, the number of children…paperless children, is growing by the millions now... and I wanted to turn this anger into something.’ Nadine Labaki, Director.
Can You Ever Forgive Me?

In this acclaimed comedy biopic, Melissa McCarthy stars as Lee Israel, best-selling celebrity biographer (and cat lover) who made her living in the ’70s and ’80s profiling the likes of Katharine Hepburn and Estee Lauder. When Lee is unable to get published after falling out of step with the marketplace, she turns her skills to deception, abetted by loyal friend Jack (Richard E. Grant). ‘Director Marielle Heller is less interested in the machinations of Israel’s scheme as she is the psychology behind it, giving us a touchingly understated portrait of self-loathing and loneliness.’ (Screen International)

‘Lee was flawed and complicated and fascinating... If she were a male character, nobody would bat an eye, but because she’s female, it feels radical...It was really cathartic to make a movie about somebody who says everything that’s on her mind.’ Marielle Heller, Director.

Colette

In this mesmerising period drama from Leeds-born director Wash Westmoreland (Still Alice), Keira Knightley shines as French novelist Gabrielle Colette in the story of her creative awakening in turn-of-the-century Paris, a place as dynamic and modern as she was. After her husband convinces her to ghost-write for him, Colette creates the loosely autobiographical Claudine novels which take Paris by storm. Caught in her husband’s shadow, Colette fights for creative ownership. ‘Wash Westmoreland’s Colette is exhilarating, funny, inspiring and (remember: corsets!) gorgeous.’ (The Guardian)

‘The original draw was Colette herself. She’s an incredibly interesting character, a brilliant writer, who made such extraordinary decisions in her own life. She did incredibly courageous things, she was a pioneer, writing about women’s sexual experiences and writing about exploring issues with her own sexuality.’ Wash Westmoreland, Director.

In the middle of Yosemite National Park towers El Capitan, a huge block of granite whose smoothest side, the Dawn Wall, is said to be the most difficult rock climb in the world. Tommy Caldwell didn’t see inhospitable terrain but rather a puzzle almost a kilometre tall: in The Dawn Wall we follow him and Kevin Jorgeson on their historic ascent to the summit. ‘While The Dawn Wall brings you up close to the miraculous feat of Caldwell and Jorgeson, the backstory (particularly of Caldwell) is just as amazing.’ (Film Threat)

‘His maniacal passion for climbing, aw-shucks humility, and unflagging optimism were an inspiration to me, so we began filming together year after year. 5 years after I first met Tommy, he told me about The Dawn Wall... He’d spent years re-defining the limits of big wall free climbing on other El Cap routes, but The Dawn Wall represented a quantum leap forward in difficulty.’ Josh Lowell, Director.

Die Tomorrow

A subtly original and surprisingly uplifting film about death, Die Tomorrow splices a series of dramatic vignettes about the last days of people’s lives with vox pop interviews and thought provoking facts about our mortality. Death often comes unexpectedly - what happens the day before is usually ordinary, featuring all the little things that make life worth living. In Bangkok, friends celebrate their graduation, siblings meet again, a couple separates, an actress is waiting to be called on set... A playful and philosophical reflection on the fate and the ephemerality of life.

‘Let’s say it’s like a compilation album of 12 to 13 songs, [all of which] speak of life and death. Or, to explain it in another way, it’s like an exhibition that’s divided into different rooms, but shows the same theme.’ Nawapol Thamrongrattanarit, Director.

Day for Night
El Angel

Co-produced by Pedro Almodóvar, this stylish crime caper is based on the early years of Argentina’s most infamous serial killer, Carlos Robledo Puch, dubbed by the press as ‘The Angel of Death’ for his angelic good looks. Lorenzo Ferro gives a hypnotic performance as the teenage sociopath with movie star swagger and a penchant for stealing. After meeting delinquent Ramon, the pair embark on a crime spree propelled by raging hormones and a palpable sexual tension, vividly brought to life by a colourful 1970’s aesthetic and a tongue-in-cheek disco soundtrack.

‘As a child I liked to experiment by doing things that were meaningless, things that made no sense at all. Some kids take that too far, to a point of no return. That is what this film is about: innocence going mad’ Luis Ortega, Director.

Girl

15-year-old Lara is already a girl yet her male body is a hindrance to happiness. Lara’s gender is accepted by her immediate family but at her prestigious ballet school she manipulates her body, determined to appear normal. This immersive and sympathetic drama by Belgian director Lukas Dhont won multiple prizes at this year’s Cannes Film Festival including best debut film and a Best Actor prize for debutante lead Victor Polster. Capturing teenage discomfort to a tee, Polster’s is an out-of-the-blue performance – in an out-of-the-blue film - that once seen, will linger always.

‘I wanted the audience to understand what it’s like to be born in a body that’s not yours. A lot of people have a body they don’t feel fully connected to. I wanted to talk about the relationship with the body, and next to that, I really wanted to show the father-child relationship. The conflict is not between them…this is a supportive character who shows a lot of love.’ Lukas Dhont, Director.
Girls of the Sun

A rousing war movie, Girls of the Sun shines its light on a battalion of female Kurdish soldiers as they attempt to liberate their town from ISIS in 2015. Golshifteh Farahani (Paterson) plays Bahar, a former hostage turned military leader. Investigating Bahar’s heroism is French photojournalist Mathilde (Emmanuelle Bercot), who is drawn inextricably to conflict. This is passionate, heart-on-sleeve cinema that combines the emotional sweep of classic war films with a hitherto little-known story – inspired by a real-life female combat unit.

“When I read about these women who refused to be oppressed and taking arms and refusing to be victims, I thought that this was a universal story. It’s not just about the Kurdish women and Yezidi women, and the people from there; it’s about all of us as women.” Eva Husson, Director.

Happy as Lazzaro

Among a group of poor but happy tobacco harvesters in bygone sun-kissed Italy, Lazzaro is an innocent fool. Ever eager to please, Lazzaro bumps along in wide-eyed generosity to his fellow man, even when he is being led well and truly up the garden path. But what begins as a gentle view of bucolic society then takes a time-bending turn part-way. Magically, we now face a different Italy, a different reality - the second half of this dreamy, Cannes prizewinning film sees our hapless hero and pals encounter modern society and its pitfalls.

“This mixture of fantasy and realism is not just a trait of my cinema – it’s a trait of my country and me.” Alice Rohrwacher, Director.
Winner of this year’s Crystal Globe at the Karlovy Vary International Film Festival, the latest film from Romanian director Radu Jude (Aferim!, Scarred Hearts) is both brilliantly conceived and wildly provocative. Following the attempts of an artist to put on a play about Romanian culpability in the Holocaust, the film plays with levels of reality and is densely packed with philosophical, cultural and historical musings on the nature of humanity, nationalism and artistic responsibility. A dazzling cinematic achievement from a director at the height of his powers.

‘I was more interested to offer not a historical film, but a present-day film in which history is brought up in order to create an image... it is a film that raises – I hope – this question of how we can represent reality in cinema, how can we represent the past.’ Radu Jude, Director.

In his finest role since the Oscar-winning turn in The Artist, Jean Dujardin is fabulous as middle aged loser Jacques in the joyfully offbeat comedy I Feel Good, directed by the duo behind the wonderful Aaltra. Endlessly dreaming of success in various dodgy, get rich quick schemes, smooth talking Jacques has actually lived off his parents most of his life. One day he shows up unexpectedly at his sister Monique’s place wearing only a hotel bathrobe. Monique and her eccentric friends are about to be bamboozled by Jacques’ exciting new business plan, tourism combined with cheap plastic surgery.

‘The experience of this film was special because of the blend of sharp precision and freedom, but the character himself isn’t so different from what I am used to. I have often played idiots obsessed with success, who speak too soon, don’t think enough and keep tripping over the carpet.’ Jean Dujardin, Actor.
In the Aisles

A highly distinctive and offbeat character drama set in a giant German supermarket with elegant, swooping cinematography along the aisles of the title. Franz Rogowski (Love Steaks) plays the shy and reclusive Christian, a new employee who is shown the ropes by gruff but avuncular veteran Bruno from the beverage aisle. He soon falls for ‘Sweets’—Marion (Sandra Hüller) though it seems his feelings will remain unrequited. Never quite what it seems, In the Aisles transcends to unexpected heights from its apparently mundane setting.

‘I’m also trying to do this, to portray life as it is, as naturalistic as it is, as precisely as it is but also to give you some kind of magic, to find a poetic moment where you do not expect it.’ Thomas Stuber, Director.

The Image Book

The Image Book is riddled with ideas, madness, media, the failures of cinema and revolution - a dense jungle of multiple texts and degraded images. The thesis sometimes breaks down, wheezing like its narrator mastermind but often it rolls along like a raging storm of thought, most notably on the West’s understanding of Arab history. This feels close to a final word from one of the great modern artists, observing this mad planet through long lenses. When screened in public, Jean-Luc Godard’s latest becomes a multisensory event, to be felt as much as to be endlessly pondered.

“Well, I just make films. And I’m interested more in facts, given my age. But what interests me about facts is not just what is happening, but what is not happening. The two go together, and you have to link them together... you can’t just talk about what’s happening, and yet people don’t talk about what’s not happening. And what’s not happening can lead to a total disaster, a catastrophe.” Jean-Luc Godard, Director.
The latest, heartfelt and captivating drama from Leeds based director Mohamed Al-Daradji and producers Human Film has been selected as the official Iraqi contender for the Oscars. This special screening launches the UK campaign with a film screening and director Q&A. The Journey is Al-Daradji’s most powerful film to date, taking a refreshingly different approach to a story involving a terrorist threat, set entirely in the recently re-opened Baghdad Central Train Station in 2006. 20 year old Sara enters with one unthinkable aim in mind only to be confronted by a series of encounters which challenge her resolve.

‘As an Iraqi filmmaker, I felt a responsibility to fully explore a topic I cannot comprehend, and understand what lies behind these acts. Dialogue is the most effective way of dealing with extreme violence where other counter-terrorism measures have failed.’ Mohamed Al-Daradji, Director.

Josh Warrington: Fighting for a City
Presented in partnership with Leeds 2023

UFF is delighted to present the world premiere of a new documentary about a Leeds sporting hero, newly-crowned IBF featherweight boxing champion Josh Warrington. Filmed over two years, Fighting for a City leads up to Josh’s championship-deciding fight against Lee Selby at Elland Road in May 2018 and its outcomes. From Leeds-based Moneyglass Films and supported by Screen Yorkshire, Fighting for a City captures the sacrifices, struggles, surprises and joys involved in achieving sporting greatness, while also telling the story of a young man’s dedication to his family and to Leeds itself.

‘Leeds people are something special in themselves. They see a Leeds lad, from an estate, just trying his best. They get behind me. When I was younger people used to say that one day I’d fight at Elland Road. I’ve done it now. I don’t want to be Leeds’ Ricky Hatton; he can drink ten pints but I can’t even drink one! But I want to be Leeds’ Josh Warrington. I’m my own man.’ Josh Warrington.
Brazilian star Karine Teles (The Second Mother) gives a stunning performance in an intimate and lived in family drama set on the outskirts of Rio de Janeiro. Irene is an anxious, loving middle age mum who is married to the easygoing Klaus and with four children, it’s a warm and chaotic household. When teenager Fernando, a keen handball player, is offered the opportunity to play for a team in Germany, the prospect has profound effects on the family unit. Everyone rallies to his cause though Irene has a particularly hard time adjusting. ‘For us the story is a coming-of-age for the mother and not for the boy. There are thousands of coming-of-age movies, I really like them, but this was a way to bring another perspective. We could have done a movie about that boy...but the other point of view, that of the mother, it’s really difficult to see. We thought we should talk about all the invisible women that are everywhere.’ Gustavo Pizzi, Director.

Maggie Gyllenhaal is quietly chilling in this story of a kindergarten teacher who becomes obsessed when one of her students starts to display a gift for poetry. At first it seems she is trying to nurture his talent, but soon it becomes apparent she wants to take credit for this child prodigy. Sara Colangelo’s second film after her debut Little Accidents is a powerful take on frustrated ambition and trying to find fulfilment through another’s talent. ‘The Kindergarten Teacher is probably the only movie about poetry with an ending as tense as any thriller.’ (The Guardian)

There’s so much here that reminded me of a woman being a constant caretaker of others and never really able to create her own art. Here she is discouraged and told she’s not an artist and she’s just trying everything she can to be in it somehow, to be close to art, but having to do it vicariously through a child.’ Sara Colangelo, Director.
Monsters and Men

A raw and uncompromising debut from Reinaldo Marcus Green, Monsters and Men explores the aftermath of an unarmed black man’s shooting by police in a powerful indictment of modern American society. The film eschews easy answers for a nuanced and complex examination of a generation torn apart by racial divides and an imbalance of power that favours only a small percentage of the population. ‘A compelling study of racial turmoil to fit our confused times...the movie not only illustrates the power of modern activism; in its final moments, it becomes such an act itself.’ (Indiewire)

‘I just kept thinking about reflections. We all have good and bad in us. We’re just human...That’s sort of a theme that is rolled out throughout the rest of the film, that’s what we carry the rest of the movie with, that sort of rally call. I am my other fellow human. We all have to look at ourselves and try to reflect.’ Reinaldo Marcus Green, Director.

The Old Man & The Gun

In what is reportedly his last film role, Robert Redford plays real life criminal Forrest Tucker who spent his life constantly escaping prison, in the latest film from David Lowery (A Ghost Story) which also stars Sissy Spacek and Casey Affleck. Redford brings a natural blend of easygoing charm and steely determination to a delightful comedy drama. ‘Robert Redford robs banks and steals your heart. And whether David Lowery’s exuberant gift of a film reps his final bow or not, Redford gives a virtuoso performance that feels like a valedictory. You want to salute him.’ (Rolling Stone)

‘I wasn’t excited necessarily about making a bank robber movie or a cops and robbers movie. Because the truth is that’s not that exciting to me, it’s not my forte. Making the Robert Redford movie was really exciting to me...a truly classic Redford film, in the spirit of the things that he made his name with, was too good an opportunity to pass up.’ David Lowery, Director.
The Parting Glass

The Parting Glass features perhaps the finest ensemble cast of any film this year, every one of whom puts in a perfectly nuanced performance in a heartfelt family drama, warm and funny and heartbreaking in turns. Actor turned director Stephen Moyer directs writer Denis O’Hare, Anna Paquin, Melissa Leo, Rhys Ifans, Ed Asner and Cynthia Nixon as an estranged family, brought back together when they are forced to piece together discarded belongings and old memories as they deal with an unexpected and sudden loss.

‘I think the other thing that hopefully we managed to do, and what Denis’ screenplay does, is it’s about truth, and truth is ugly. And that’s ok... Human frailty and human failure is part and parcel of the makeup of who we all are and that’s ok, and that’s what people don’t talk about.’ Stephen Moyer, Director.

Pause

Tonia Mishiali’s striking feature debut is teeming with elements of pitch black humor, and a mesmerising central performance. As she enters the menopause, middle-aged housewife Elpida is haunted by an increasing sense of contempt for her oppressive marriage. Together with the physical changes she experiences to her body, Elpida’s suppressed desires also come to the surface through violent fantasies in which she takes revenge on her brutish husband. As the fantasies begin to spiral out of control, Elpida’s perception of reality starts to blur.

‘I wanted to make a film that is viewed through the prism of the complex and fascinating female nature. Pause is a film about the loss of one’s voice, the longing for love and unquenchable desires. Since women in cinema are traditionally misrepresented, I wanted the film to depict a female character that is very much real. Therefore, Elpida’s life is important to me.’ Tonia Mishiali, Director.
Mike Leigh delivers an impassioned warning against political complacency in his latest film which focuses on the infamous Peterloo massacre of 1819 when a demonstration for political reform led to the deaths of many protestors. Leigh has crafted a tense piece of work as he chronicles the events leading up to the tragic day and shows a political class convinced that reform equals revolution. With some strong performances by the likes of Maxine Peake and Rory Kinnear, this is some of Leigh’s most fierce and powerful work.

‘I had the idea quite a long time ago, before I ever had the idea of making period films, that someone ought to make a film about Peterloo...this is actually very prescient, very relevant to things that are happening. And now, four to five years later, having made the film, it resonates with so many things. The meaning of the concept of democracy needs to be scrutinized.’ Mike Leigh, Director.

Moussa Touré’s powerful refugee drama is the story of 30 Senegalese men from different ethnic and religious backgrounds attempting to reach the Canary Islands in a small wooden pirogue across the treacherous sea. ‘What distinguishes The Pirogue is not the depiction of danger and loss at sea, but a deep understanding of West African culture... The Pirogue is rich with authentic details.’ (NPR)

‘My film is not miserable, I wanted it to be tough, but with a lot of sensitivity and poetry. I was born in fiction even if for a long time I only made documentaries. Today I have become a mixture of both and when you face a very dramatic reality, if you directly show that dramatic nature, it becomes too excessive. This is why the film is silent. If a child dies of fever here, what do we do? We will bury him, quietly, and in silence.’ Moussa Touré, Director.
Pond Life

Pond Life is a perfectly formed coming of age tale set in a quiet mining village outside Doncaster in the mid 90s with breakout performances from a talented cast of young actors. First time director Bill Buckhurst imbues his tale with considerable warmth and charm. A group of young friends and neighbours come together for a fishing expedition after rumours spread of a giant carp in the area. In a world of broken families, cassette tapes and rumbling political fever, these friends, each with their own struggles to bear, share a moment of harmony.

“When I first read Richard’s script I was blown away by the authenticity of the young voices in his story. He loves these characters and manages to capture perfectly the highs and the lows of this disparate group of young people, as they try to find their way in a complicated world… despite all the pain, both personal and communal, that envelops them all, they still just want to be kids.” Bill Buckhurst, Director.

Pity

Raising the stakes for the Greek weird wave to pitch black comedy, Pity is a deadpan satire about a man who becomes addicted to sadness. Giannis Drakopoulos puts in a calculatedly inexpressive performance to extraordinary effect, playing a lawyer whose wife is in a coma. Everyone around him goes to great lengths to comfort him, an arrangement he goes to increasing lengths to prolong. Directed by Babis Makridis and co-written by Dogtooth and Killing of a Sacred Deer writer, Efthimis Filippou.

“We felt there were two kinds of pity. One is that you give pity to others and you feel okay as a person. You do it for you, not for others. The other one has to do with what you do to receive pity to feel okay, to be the center of attention. We thought this was the more interesting kind of pity that we wanted to explore.’ Babis Makridis, Director.
Both a nail-biting thriller and a heartbreaking love story, The Reports on Sarah and Saleem is a clever and moving socio-political drama. Sarah is Israeli and runs a café in West Jerusalem. Saleem is Palestinian from East Jerusalem and works as a deliveryman. They embark on an illicit affair and in the political circumstances, the stakes are considerably higher than a regular case of infidelity. Both families are at risk if the affair is exposed though the dangers and moral responsibilities are very different for all those involved. Screening in partnership with the Leeds Palestine Solidarity Campaign.

‘I grew up in a family where storytelling was a very crucial part of our lives and our survival. Both my mother and father’s families lost their homes and farming land in 1948. The importance of storytelling and images to us, and to Palestinians in generally, lead me to filmmaking.’ Muayad Alayan, Director.

The extraordinary debut feature by the renowned artist Richard Billingham returns to his striking photographs of his family during Thatcher-era Britain to tell a universal story of everyday conflicts, loneliness, love and loss. On the outskirts of Birmingham and the margins of society the Billingham family perform extreme rituals and break cultural taboos as they muddle through a life decided by factors beyond their control. At times shocking and laced with an unsettling humour, three-interlinking episodes unfold as a powerful evocation of the artist’s personal experience of growing up in a Black Country council flat.

‘Shooting on film, there’s a different sort of approach..I believe you work harder and you don’t rely on the editing as much. It’s more determined, a more considered and more determined way of working... Shooting on digital feels a bit like a product. Using film forces a different kind of tension onto the subject.’ Richard Billingham, Director.
Sauvage is an emotionally intense debut drama from French director Camille Vidal-Naquet centred by a heartbreakingly authentic central performance from Félix Maritaud (120BPM). He radiates abandon and vulnerability in equal measures as Leo, a young gay man who sells his body on the street to get by. Displaying a reckless neglect for his own wellbeing and an overwhelming desire to be loved, he hustles his way from one drug fuelled encounter to the next in a gripping and unsentimental tale rooted in a real respect and warmth for its characters.

‘I started from a free and lonely young man longing for love. An ‘otherworldly’ young man, not at all preoccupied by the material aspect of life. The image of that young street hustler selling his body, came to me. I wrote a first script, letting myself be guided by the power of the character.’ Camille Vidal-Naquet, Director.
In Sébastien Marnier’s eerie drama, a high school teacher throws himself from the classroom window before the terrified eyes of his students. Despite the tragedy, six of them remain oddly calm and unemotional. Pierre, the new substitute teacher, soon notices the hostile behaviour of this close-knit clique. Smart and precocious, the six teenagers seem to be harbouring a dark secret. As Pierre becomes increasingly obsessed with them, he is quickly sucked into their sinister game. The film contains footage that some viewers may find disturbing.

‘I think the world has become so scary that we take refuge in our little lives, trying to make them as pleasant as possible, as if we feel that we have to make the most of it now, before something disastrous happens...It was this tension, this ambiguity, that I had to explore: I wanted to ensure that we never know who the monsters really are, the adults or the children.’ Sébastien Marnier, Director.

Winner of this year’s Palme d’Or, this deeply rich story of a deeply poor family will steal your heart. On wintry Tokyo backstreets, a man and his young boy are doing the shopping for the household – their practiced shoplifting routine yields food for everyone. Going home they spot a hungry little girl and before long the family has extended to six – poor but loving, and often joyful. From the director of Like Father, Like Son and Our Little Sister comes his most beautifully satisfying film yet.

[My films are complicated because] life is never simple. Producing a narrative that is easy to understand is not important. Rather, I believe we have to pass on that something that apparently seems simple is indeed complicated.’ Hirokazu Koreeda, Director.
Rike, a European doctor in her thirties, is determined and self-confident. Taking a much-needed vacation from her hectic routine in the emergency ward, she embarks on a solo voyage across the Atlantic to the volcanic island of Ascension. But Rike’s voyage is cut short when she is faced alone with an emergency on an entirely different level as she comes across an overloaded, sinking refugee boat which doesn’t respond to radio contact. Susanne Wolff is extraordinary as Rike in Wolfgang Fischer’s intense and engrossing drama that is a visceral allegory of the modern world.

‘We wanted there to be no escape from this dilemma. It raises the question of what to do, what is right, what is wrong in this situation, and this dilemma needs to keep up this tension, which was our aim.’ Wolfgang Fischer, Director.

Sofia

Meryem Benn’Barek’s debut feature won the best screenplay prize in Cannes’ Un Certain Regard section, for its eye opening look at modern day Morocco. Sofia, 20, lives with her parents in Casablanca. Suffering from pregnancy denial, she finds herself breaking the law by giving birth to a baby out of wedlock. The hospital gives her 24 hours to provide them with the identification papers belonging to the father of the child before alerting the authorities. Sofia must quickly figure out a way to keep her family’s honour and save herself from prison.

‘My story began quite naturally. I asked myself how a drama such as this could highlight every aspect of how a society operates.’ Meryem Benn’Barek, Director.
Too Late to Die Young is a vivid and sensuous coming of age tale from Chilean director Dominga Sotomayor (Thursday Till Sunday), partly based on her own childhood. The film is set in the alternative ecological community of Peñalolén in the shadow of the Andes through one languorous summer in 1990. In this time of change and reckoning after the end of the dictatorship, 16-year-old Sofía and Lucas, and 10-year-old Clara, struggle with parents, first loves, and fears, as they prepare a big party for New Year’s Eve.

‘I like to play with this timelessness. I was captured initially by the idea of making a film about teenagers, about adolescence. But also about a country—Chile—that is adolescent. I was trying to portray a period so full of hope for the future that it may have been necessary to forget the past a little bit.’ Dominga Sotomayor Castillo, Director.

A wickedly inventive stop motion puppet animation, full of dark and deadpan humour, often strangely touching and sometimes just plain strange. This Magnificent Cake! is an anthology film set in 19th Century colonial Africa, following various characters from a troubled king to a middle aged Pygmy working in a luxury hotel. It’s the long form debut of Belgian animators Marc James Roels and Emma De Swaef who are among the most original new voices in contemporary animation. Screening with their mesmerising short film Oh Willy originally screened in our World Animation Competition in 2013.

‘In terms of character design, the experience of making documentaries led us to come across many fascinating people so a lot of the characters, and especially the character of Willy in Oh Willy… can be traced back to an actual person. Most of our character ideas now are based on stuff we come across doing research — characters from books, illustrations, photos, paintings, that kind of thing. We tend to steer clear of wacky, cartoonish characters and situations so when something out of the ordinary does occur it has more of an impact.’ Marc James Roels, Emma De Swaef, Co-Directors.
Touch Me Not

Touch Me Not won the prestigious Golden Bear at this year’s Berlin Film Festival although it caused some controversy along the way with its unconventional narrative and provocative subject matter. Director Adina Pintilie explores the fluid border between reality and fiction, following the emotional journeys of Laura, an English woman who confronts her conflicting feelings about intimacy in increasingly challenging ways, and Christian, a man suffering from spinal muscular atrophy, whose frank exchanges with companion Tómas, confront conventional views of beauty and sexuality in deeply insightful ways.

“We refuse the documentary label with all our force. It’s a hybrid of fiction and reality.” Adina Pintilie, Director.

Widows

For his much-anticipated fourth feature after Hunger, Shame and 12 Years of Slave, Steve McQueen takes a different direction with white-knuckle heist thriller Widows. Co-written by Gone Girl creator Gillian Flynn – and for those who may remember, based on Lynda La Plante’s ‘80s ITV series – Widows is the story of four women who take fate into their own hands when faced with a ruinous debt left over after the deaths of their criminal husbands. ‘This is precision entertainment, a crackling, pulse-pounding heist movie with a sterling cast, a whip-smart script, and undeniable social resonance.’ (The Film Stage)

‘The shot with Colin Farrell as he drives from an impoverished neighborhood to a wealthy neighborhood is getting a lot of attention, but it just encapsulates everything that’s going on in this movie. You see the landscape change in the journey. You see the private and the public.’ – Steve McQueen, Director.
The Wild Pear Tree

In his new film, Nuri Bilge Ceylan takes the direction of his previous work, Winter Sleep (winner of the Palme d'Or), to new heights in a story that focuses on a young man at a crossroads. Sinan, a literature enthusiast, returns home from college to the provincial town of his childhood, set on raising money to publish his first novel. But he finds the situation at home is far from encouraging. Meticulous cinematography and performances are intertwined with complex, philosophical dialogues to yield another extraordinary work from the Turkish master.

'This film attempts to tell the story of a young man who senses with a feeling of guilt that he is different in a way that he cannot come to accept... As the saying goes, “what a father keeps hidden is revealed in the son”... The film tells the story of a boy being inevitably dragged into the same destiny as his father, in a plot loaded with painful experiences.’ Nuri Bilge Ceylan, Director.

This year’s Cinema Versa programme traverses intellectual, political and environmental landscapes, providing a challenging and radical survey of our world through the documentary form with special previews, live events, and short film programmes.

Careering from the largest electronic waste dump in the world to seminal Chicagooan industrial record labels through deep listening on the edge of the Vosges mountain in France and intimate private movies of Vladimir Putin’s first year in power, these films travel the world and beyond, questioning our assumptions and deconstructing our ways of seeing.
Beautiful Things

A spectacular and symphonic journey into our obsessive consumption, Beautiful Things is a hybrid film structured in four parts: Oil, Cargo, Measure and Ash. The film describes the hidden mechanical liturgy within remote locations where borderline men work in complete isolation without any interference from the outside world. These men trigger, unconsciously, the long chain of creation, transport, commercialization and destruction of the objects feeding our bulimic lifestyle. They are monks inside temples of steel and concrete, repeating the same liturgy every day. And we don’t even know they exist.

‘Objects are compressing our lives and I decided to create a dichotomy between our oppressive life with the objects and the silent life around the characters.’ Giorgio Ferrer, Co-Director.

Chris the Swiss

Artist and filmmaker Anja Kofmel combines documentary, animation, investigative journalism and diary film to unique effect in Chris the Swiss. Chris was a young Swiss journalist found dead in mysterious circumstances in Croatia in 1992, wearing the uniform of an international mercenary group. Anja was his cousin and grew up admiring her charismatic older relative. Now a grown woman, she decides to investigate his story, travelling to Croatia to interview friends and associates, constructing haunting animated sequences to bring that story alive.

‘Chris the Swiss is the story of how certain forces trigger exactly these dark patches and misuse the population in order to increase their own power. It is the story of how war and brutality destroy people, families and societies.’ Anja Kofmel, Director.
Disco and Atomic War
Estonia 100

Disco and Atomic War is a playful cultural critique analysing the erosion of Soviet Cold War control by the infiltration of western pop culture. Director Jaak Kilmi and screenwriter Kiur Aarma grew up in the same neighborhood of Tallinn, Estonia, in the ‘80s and a whole new world opened up for them via the illicit consumption of Finnish TV. From disco to Dallas, Macgyver to Emmanuelle, Estonians were drawn to the glowing ephemera of capitalism and the Soviet authorities failed in increasingly absurd measures to control it. Deadpan narration and fantastic archive footage enlighten an entertaining overview.

‘Life under the Soviet system was often funny, absurd really, especially for children. So in making the film, we felt we couldn’t escape the inherent humor, and we didn’t want to escape it, because everything was so absurd.’ Jaak Klimi, Director.

The Drunkard’s Lament

Cult mockumentary auteur Jim Finn (Interkosmos, The Juche Idea) returns with an epistolary, musical reimagining of Wuthering Heights by Branwell—the tubercular, alcoholic and opium-addicted brother of Emily Brontë. Assembled from early cinema style fragments, the story is reimagined as a musical memoir based on Branwell’s life after realising that he was the model for the alcoholic Hindley Earnshaw character. Following the screening Jim Finn will run a tabletop role-playing game in front of the audience based on Branwell’s altered reality version of his sister’s novel.

‘If you have the ability to make people laugh, that’s basically the equivalent of grabbing someone by the balls in the film world. You have them — they’re not going anywhere — if you can make them laugh. If you can make someone laugh out loud multiple times, that is fucking gold. [And once I have their attention], I then go in this other direction of dry political commentary.’ Jim Finn, Director.
Genesis 2.0

A jawdropping documentary about a bizarre 21st Century subculture arising from the ongoing revolution in genetics. On the remote New Siberian Islands in the Arctic Ocean, hunters are searching for the tusks of extinct mammoths. There is a gold rush fever in the air. The price for white gold has never been so high. The thawing permafrost not only releases precious ivory. The tusk hunters find a surprisingly well-preserved mammoth carcass. Such finds are magnets for high-tech genetic scientists who want to bring the extinct woolly mammoth back to life à la Jurassic Park.

‘The film approaches everything with a curious scepticism. It asks questions and doesn’t condemn. It tries to comprehend the new and the strange without being gullible. Utopia and dystopia, curiosity and skepticism — these are the main conflicts of our film. And its main drive.’ Christian Frei, Co-Director.

The Goodiepal Equation

Goodiepal is a puckish, enigmatic Danish artist and musician, a notorious and controversial figure in his home country and the perfect subject for a documentary. Sami Sänppäkilä’s film follows his subject over several years and various reinventions, from the release of a beautifully designed record with a free bank note and no music on it, to inscrutable performance lectures and epic journeys on a self-built bicycle that he uses to power his shows. He gravitates from the fringes of society to an exhibition for the National Museum of Denmark comprising all his material possessions.

The Goodiepal Equation documentary film reveals a small part of Goodiepal’s personality and mystery. It shows its protagonist as both an uncompromising artist and a loyal friend. Goodiepal is by nature impenetrable, yet consistent. That is why people often either love him or hate him.’ Director, Sami Sänppäkilä.

The Image You Missed

Drawing on over 30 years of unique and never-seen-before imagery, The Image You Missed is a documentary essay film that weaves together a history of the Northern Irish Troubles with the story of a son’s search for his father. In the process, the film creates a candid encounter between two filmmakers born into different political moments, revealing their contrasting experiences of Irish nationalism, the role of images in social struggle, and the competing claims of personal and political responsibility.

I was thinking a lot about the idea of reconciliation when I was making the film. Reconciliation between me and my father, between North and South, between his time and mine. I thought a lot about what it is like to place one image next to another. It’s almost like the idea of going back to the womb – a certain desire that can never truly be fulfilled.’ Donal Foreman, Director.

Industrial Accident: The Story of Wax Trax! Records

From humble beginnings in the bible belt to Chicago, Illinois, Jim Nash and Dannie Flesher built one of the most influential American independent record labels: Wax Trax! which would evolve into a record store and music label like no other. The label became the nexus of the new wave, punk rock and industrial music scenes, and was America’s preeminent industrial label of the 1980s and ‘90s, releasing records by Ministry, Nine Inch Nails, COIL, Chris & Casey and many more. This is a remarkable tale of two men’s music obsession and the creation and crumble of their personal and professional empires.

My dad and Dannie were two men who fostered and valued a community where people could be themselves no matter how absurd. That was always a cornerstone of Wax Trax! Records and probably why it still resonates with some today. The fact that they were two music and art obsessed fans who happened to be gay with no apologies was inspiring to many going through their own struggles.’ Director, Julia Nash.
In the Stillness of Sounds

A renowned sound engineer and biologist, Marc Namblard lives with his family on the edge of a forest in the Vosges mountains in France. During the day (and sometimes at night), Namblard ventures deep into the forest, audio equipment in tow, to capture sounds no one’s heard before: a bee rubbing its legs together, the drumbeat of marching ants, the songs of nocturnal animals, ice cracking beneath a frozen lake. A magical and beguiling documentary that asks us to reconsider how we see – and hear – our world, In The Stillness of Sounds offers a wondrous appreciation of nature’s ecosystem.

‘I actually like this ambiguity [between music and documentary, electroacoustic and naturalism] and I’d rather be moving around instead of sticking to a defined position. This is simply because my sensibility is plural and all of these approaches of the ‘sonic environment’ seem equally interesting to me. I actually don’t establish any hierarchy among them. What matters to me is the sincerity and quality of the work.’ Marc Namblard, Sound Artist.

Invisible Britain

Arriving with endorsements from Jeremy Corbyn, Ken Loach and Alan Moore, Invisible Britain: Portraits of Hope and Resilience is an essential new book with photographs and untold stories from people who have been left out of the media narrative and left behind by government policy. Editor Paul Sng is also the director of the recent documentary about notorious band Sleaford Mods who perfectly articulate the rage of this trend for social exclusion. The film screening will be followed by a panel Q&A to discuss the book with Paul Sng and accomplished photographers Joanne Coates and Les Monaghan.

‘This is a class that have everything taken from them and are then derided for the want of it: denied a functional education they are typified as ignorant, robbed of their jobs they are called benefit scroungers and, while effectively silenced in any cultural or social debate, are seen as inarticulate. This magnificent and very timely book puts the lie to that with its sensitive portraits — some inspiring, some heart-breaking, some both at once — of a diverse, various and above all resilient people who, when given a voice, have stories that urgently need to be listened to. This is a profoundly important human document, haunting for all the right reasons, and must be read.’ Alan Moore, Artist.

Island of the Hungry Ghosts

This extraordinary first feature by Gabrielle Brady won Best Documentary at Tribeca Film Festival. It follows trauma counsellor Poh Lin, as she attempts to support refugees detained in a high-security detention facility, run by the Australian Government on Christmas Island. In striking contrast to the intimate therapy sessions of detainees, the film beautifully captures the annual migration of the forty million land crabs that make an epic odyssey from the island’s jungle to its rugged coastline. A poetic masterpiece that weaves together the island’s violent past and its inescapable present.

‘I didn’t want to ever create a refugee film. When I say that, I mean one that has a traditional storyline of following somebody’s journey and I felt that there are a lot of films that explore that at this moment. And then another reason is I wanted to make a film about an island, about a place and a kind of moment in time. So, the decision around the observational was that we, as people watching the film, become a witness to what’s happening, as Poh Lin is a witness to what’s happening. For me a film grows from a place – it’s how I connect to an idea, the location first and then the human stories or drama inside of that.’ Gabrielle Brady, Director.

King Skate

Communist era Czechoslovakia and skateboarding might not seem the most likely union of subjects for a documentary, but director Simon Safránek ditches dour Eastern Bloc clichés in his fascinating story of restricted youth discovering and embracing skate culture. Assembled from hours of 8mm footage shot in the ’70s and ’80s, King Skate features Safránek and his skateboarding friends as they generate a blast of freedom amid often grim surroundings. With a terrific soundtrack – including the likes of Devo and the Sex Pistols – King Skate celebrates the sights and sounds of youthful rebellion.

‘We’re not making some philosophical essay to cover the meaning of life – for me, King Skate is a ‘party movie’ that should entertain. It should be a bit like seeing Avengers – the audience is supposed to be overwhelmed by the stream of audiovisual information. They should walk out of the movie over stuffed with images and sounds.’ – Simon Safránek, Director.
The Library
Music Film

An exploration of the parallel universe of library music, audio treasure hidden behind the attention seeking facade of pop culture. Ingenious and anonymous purveyors of soundtrack music for film and tv editors in the pre-digital era, the industry nurtured great composers and virtuoso session musicians, some of the most ubiquitous and familiar tunes ever known and a cult following after the sampling explosion of hip hop culture. Featuring a cast of infectiously enthusiastic devotees, collectors and practitioners led by musician/DJ Shawn Lee and director Paul Elliott who will perform live.

‘Some of the best and most interesting music ever made in my opinion is library music. The music really speaks to your imagination and covers virtually every style known to man, and some that aren’t! Library is the ultimate rare and collectible idiom. The fact that it was never commercially released, and it was pressed in really small amounts with little information on the sleeves, just adds to the whole mystery of it.’ Shawn Lee, Producer.

Lock Her Up
Installation

We are delighted to be hosting Fuel, also producers of Charlie Ward, who will present Lock Her Up, a unique and haunting sound installation exploring women’s experiences in prison over the last 100 years, which will take place in the Victorian prison cells under the Town Hall during the Film Festival. Lock Her Up comprises three individual ten-minute pieces by artists Sabrina Mahfouz, Rachel Mars, and Paula Varjack in collaboration with sound designer Gareth Fry.

‘The criminal justice system has been created by men for men and there needs to be a complete overhaul to deal specifically with criminal justice for women. No area is this more starkly obvious than when it comes to maternity and motherhood in prison. [this] is what inspired the content and format of my piece for Fuel. I wanted to disorientate the listener but also ground them firmly in the facts of gender inequality being played out within an archaic system that does as little for society as it does for the individual.’ Sabrina Mahfouz, Director.

Measure of the Moon: Leeds Pioneers

The Measure of the Moon is an illustrated talk exploring the role Leeds has played in the history of astronomy, photography and film from the seventeenth century to the present day. Researcher Irfan Shah (The First Film) will show how inventors, scientists and adventurers connected to Leeds were instrumental in everything from the creation of the micrometer to calotype photography to the birth of film, and will reveal the long-forgotten locations where their work took place.

The talk will include new pieces of research being made public for the first time and will trace a line from seventeenth century astronomers to nineteenth century inventors such as Louis Le Prince and Wordsworth Donisthorpe through to Leeds innovators who continue to challenge our notions of just what film is and can still be. The Measure of the Moon is a part of the Car Parks of the Gods (and other places of great and improbable wonder) project supported by Lomography and the Leeds Philosophical and Literary Society.

The Other Side of Everything
Lux Prize Finalist

Filmmaker Mila Turaljic (Cinema Komunisto) blends the personal and political to unique effect in The Other Side of Everything, focussing on her mother, Sribajanka, university lecturer and dissident, an outspoken critic of Slobodan Milosevic throughout his regime. A locked door in an apartment in Belgrade, which has not been opened for more than 65 years, drives the desire to explore what comes after a democratic revolution. The chronicle of a family in Serbia becomes a portrait of choices one makes, from struggling against repression to dealing with disillusion under transition.

‘I was born in 1979, a year old when Tito died and was 11 years old when Milosevic came to power, 12 when the war in the former Yugoslavia started, 16 when it finished, 20 when NATO bombed us, 21 when we finally got rid of Milosevic, 24 when our Prime Minister was assassinated, and today at the ripe old age of 37, I want to speak of my country, from a very personal angle, and from a very precise point of departure - the place where I live.’
Mila Turaljic, Director.
In December 2016 the learning-disabled Finnish punk rock band Pertti Kurikan Nimipäivät - stars of The Punk Syndrome (2012) - retired. This is a remarkable follow-up documentary about the last years of the band as they play nearly 300 gigs in 16 countries, grapple with the pressures of sudden fame, including representing Finland at the Eurovision as the cracks begin to show. Kari struggles with the temptations and responsibilities brought by publicity; Sami extends his territory to politics and religion; Toni’s and the band’s roadie Niila’s crush on the same girl caused conflicts; and songwriter Pertti decides to retire.

‘We are straight up punk rockers. We are rebelling against society in different ways, but we are not political. We are changing attitudes somewhat, a lot of people are coming to our gigs and we have a lot of fans. We don’t want people to...feel sorry for us, we are not that different from everybody else – just normal guys with a mental handicap.’ – Pertti Kurikka Nimipäivät, Finnish punk rock band.

Vitaly Mansky was head of the documentary department for Russia’s state TV network when the country was transitioning from the Yeltsin era into the authoritarian Putin regime. Mansky was on the scene as Putin consolidated his power and started dismantling Yeltsin’s democratic reforms to make Russia great again. In Putin’s Witnesses, the now self-exiled filmmaker reassembles his footage from 1999-2000 to riveting and frightening effect as he gets up close to the soon-to-be dictator. Screening with short ‘vibration film’ Government House, a spectral imagining of a luxury housing block in 1930s Moscow.

‘[Putin’s accession] all happened in closed rooms with no third person present. But Putin was head of the FSB in 1998. The head of the FSB knows everything that happens in the country. He knew the results of the secret questionnaire that had been created to find what people wanted in their next president. And, at a certain moment, he presented himself, answering all the criteria.’ Vitaly Mansky, Director.
The Raft

In the summer of 1973, five men and six women embarked on a 101-day scientific sea-adventure, drifting on a small raft across the Atlantic. In this experiment initiated by Mexican anthropologist Santiago Genovés, the group set out to explore the origins of violence and the dynamics of sexual attraction. As leader of the experiment, Genovés had hoped to be able to report on his human guinea pigs but did not plan on the group despising him and plotting his murder. More than forty years later, the surviving members tell the hidden story behind ‘one of the strangest group experiments of all time’.

‘Santiago Genovés represented a certain generation of men, being this kind of macho intellectual figure who combined academic studies with adventure. He did want to be progressive, part of the feminist movement, but at the same time, he thrived for recognition from his peers.’ Marcus Lindeen, Director.

Rodents of Unusual Size

Hard-headed Louisiana fisherman Thomas Gonzales doesn’t know what will hit him next. After decades of hurricanes and oil spills he faces a new threat - hordes of monstrous 20 pound swamp rats. Known as “nutria”, these invasive South American rodents breed faster than the roving squads of hunters can control them. And with their orange teeth and voracious appetite they are eating up the coastal wetlands that protects Thomas and his town of Delacroix Island from hurricanes. But the people who have lived here for generations are not the type of folks who will give up without a fight...

“We see the story of this most unlikely invasive species as an entry-point to a unique part of the world that is rapidly changing before our eyes. We wanted to document the place at this moment of time and the nutria served as a good through-line.’ Chris Meltzler, Co-Director.
In 1992, Estonia held its first free elections since the Second World War, and saw 32-year-old upstart Mart Laar become Europe’s youngest prime minister. With unparalleled access and unearthed archives, filmmakers Raimo Jõerand and Kiur Aarma reconstruct the unbridled policies, legal-ish currency conversions and social sea change that forced citizens to risk complete uncertainty to join the 21st century. Laar himself tells the story, along with other key actors in his political theatre, of just how wild the Eastern Bloc had to get in order to reach the west.

‘The film can be seen as a kind of ode to making it through all the harsh conditions, and a certain sense of humor that always saves people. Estonians may need a poignant reminder of the dangers our country faced when it rejected authoritarian rule. We should be glad that Estonia chose the other way from the very beginning, (and became) an open-minded and free society.’ Kiur Aarma, Director.

The Silence of Others is a powerful and passionate documentary about the victims of General Franco’s dictatorship in Spain, still battling for justice forty years after his death. Franco’s repressive regime silenced any of his opposition with mass arrests, prison camps, forced labor, torture and execution. After the establishment of a liberal democracy, the controversial Amnesty Law freed anti-Franco political prisoners but also the regime’s henchmen responsible for countless atrocities. A growing grassroots campaign has been fighting to bring them to justice ever since.

‘How is it possible today that there are people who are dying before they’re able to exhume their loved ones and bury them in a cemetery in a country with such Christian values? How is it possible that there are thousands of children who don’t know who their parents are?’ Almudena Carracedo, Co-Director.
The Silver Branch

A breathtakingly beautiful and emotional documentary which captures the heart and soul of a farmer-poet, Patrick McCormack. Katrina Costello’s film is centred around his life in The Burren, situated in that most magical of Irish counties, Co. Clare - a wild place where Mesolithic tombs, famine villages and present day small rocky fields are like jewels telling of our long human story on these hills. Patrick longs to farm in the quiet pace of his antecedents but his life gains a different momentum when he is called to battle in the Supreme Court to decide on the fate of this iconic wilderness.

“We have educated ourselves out of our landscape. The harsh beauty of the landscape has shaped the people that live in The Burren. It has taught them a universal wisdom, a philosophy of life, a spirituality that gives them inner strength.” Katrina Costello, Director.

The Wedding Present are one of the legendary Leeds bands and their 1987 debut George Best is the album that defines young love for a generation of indie fans. Something Left Behind is a unique rockumentary which examines the enduring legacy of this record, interviewing all the original band members and tracing Weddoes history from their high school origins to the triumphant 30 year homecoming anniversary performance of George Best at Leeds O2 Academy last year. Singer David Gedge, original guitarist Peter Solowka, drummer Shaun Charman and director Andrew Jezard will be joining us for a Q&A at the Hyde Park.

“I’ve always thought that The Wedding Present was an inappropriate name for a pop group – more like a poem, or a book or something – and therefore quite attractive [to me]! I’ve also always been fascinated by weddings.” David Gedge, The Wedding Present.
2018 marks the centenary of Nelson Mandela’s birth. There is no film footage of his notorious trial in 1963-4 but The State Against Mandela uses beautifully designed sequences of animation to bring the recently recovered archival audio recordings to life. There were also eight others who, like him, faced the death sentence and were subjected to pitiless cross-examinations. They all stood firm and turned the tables on the state: South Africa’s apartheid regime was in the dock and this inventive and compelling film transports us back into the thick of the courtroom battles, shedding new light on a familiar story.

‘I had the chance to interview some of the defendants who were sentenced alongside Nelson Mandela when I was a special correspondent to Johannesburg. They were black, white and Indian, and like him, they paid a heavy price, but remained in the shadows. I wanted to give these voices unknown to the general public a platform, on an equal footing with Nelson Mandela, who is the only one to have really been in the limelight.’ Nicolas Champeaux, Co-Director.

With a fighting spirit and a storyteller’s heart, Rukia looks to start her life over in a new land. Peter Nyaga, a charismatic preacher, has already found his answer, but it means he cannot waste even a train ride in spreading his gospel. And Maasai elder Isaya embarks on a multi-day trek home, joined by his grandson William, who is more interested in pursuing his career as a performer in the city than in carrying on the ancient traditions of his people. Jeroen van Velzen’s ruminative, captivating road movie follows three people finding their way on a train journey across Tanzania.

‘I find that something that really agitates me is all these foreign filmmakers that go to Africa and portray this kind of devastating landscape where everybody’s just kind of fighting to survive but also their hopelessness. And there only being poverty and war and destruction. I think that there’s so many things changing in East Africa at this moment and I was hoping this film could show that – negative sides and positive sides.’ Jeroen Van Velzen, Director.

Tanzania Transit
Taste of Cement

Ziad Kalthoum creates an essay documentary of Syrian construction workers building new skyscrapers in Beirut on the ruins caused by the Lebanese civil war as their own homes are being bombed. A curfew prohibits them from leaving the construction site after work. Every night in their pit below the skyscraper, the news from their homeland and the memories of the war chase them. Mute and imprisoned in the cement underground, they must endure until the new day arrives where the hammering and welding drowns out their nightmares. Taste Of Cement is an empathetic portrait of workers in exile.

‘For me, there is no difference between fiction and documentary, you know? A film is a film. There are no rules to tell you: this is a documentary or this is a fiction film. It’s just a film. And in our case, we did film real life, real people, real situations, but we chose a different language for our subject matter, different from a classical documentary.’ Ziad Kalthoum, Director.

True North

True North is a short documentary following the creation of a song from its inception as an idea - to sing and celebrate the North’s peculiarities, with all its humour, landscape, politics, history and language - to its completion as a piece of choral music sung by over 100 voices at Newcastle’s Great Exhibition of the North. The film follows Chumbawamba guitarist Boff Whalley and Yorkshire’s infamous Commoners Choir as they do battle with armaments-manufacturers BAE Systems in order to complete the song.

Boff Whalley and the combined force of three unique and eclectic choirs from Leeds, Manchester and Stockton take Newcastle’s Great Exhibition of the North by storm, battling unethical sponsors and tricky four part harmonies to perform a specially commissioned song in an unforgettable one-off live performance outside SAGE Gateshead in June 2018, a song that defines the North through its history, geography and sense of cultural identity.

Soothing birdsong filters through dense forest vegetation only to be drowned out by the cataclysmic roar of buzzing chainsaws. Thus begins a documentary comprising thirteen 360° panning shots or tableaux, celebrating both Henry David Thoreau’s similarly titled work, in praise of nature and self-sufficiency, and the German word Wald meaning forest. As soon as we align our breathing with the slow rhythm of the shots a surprising odyssey opens out before us of the paradoxical migration of wood from Austrian forests to a secret, far-off destination.

“Walden is a meticulously flowing, cosmopolitan reflection, that by example of an international trade route provides hyper realistic insights into different working worlds. With a constant slow pace, the camera turns on its own axis. This extreme slowing-down sensitizes the viewer into a trancelike observation of details. This unusually cautious scanning of the surroundings is an invitation to reflect in-depth upon the different socio-political realities and word views.” Daniel Zimmermann, Director.

Agbogbloshie in Ghana is the largest electronic waste dump in the world. About 6000 women, men and children live and work here. They call it ‘Sodom’. Every year about 250,000 tons of sorted-out computers, smartphones, air-condition tanks and other devices from a far away electrified and digitalized world end up here. Welcome to Sodom (which is the title of a rap song in the film) places us right in the middle of the location’s dark heart. Screening with Bordalo II, a portrait of Portuguese street artist Arthur Bordalo who aims to highlight the extent of our wastefulness and the impact it has on our environment through his “Trash Animals” sculptures.

I was always fascinated by places, which are a world on its own. And the world’s largest e-waste dump definitely is such a place... some films just have to be made. No matter what. And especially after meeting the people living on the dump as we were there for research – from there, there was no turning back.” Florian Weigensamer, Co-Director.
What is Democracy?

Director Astra Taylor’s idiosyncratic, philosophical journey spans millennia and continents: from ancient Athens’ groundbreaking experiment in self-government to capitalism’s roots in medieval Italy; from modern-day Greece grappling with financial collapse and a mounting refugee crisis to the United States reckoning with its racist past and the growing gap between rich and poor. This urgent film connects the past and the present, the emotional and the intellectual, the personal and the political, in order to provoke and inspire. If we want to live in democracy, we must first ask what the word even means.

‘If you’re going to make a film that is aiming at getting people out of their chairs, you’d better be connected to social movements and know what it is you’re connecting people to and be connected to something strategic. Otherwise, what are you creating this energy for?’ Astra Taylor, Director.

If you’re a fan of fantasy and cult cinema in any form – action, anime, comedy, horror, sci-fi, thriller and beyond – then you’ll love Fanomenon.

Kicking off with Sorry to Bother You, the long-awaited satirical sci-fi from Boots Riley, Fanomenon highlights this year also include: remarkable new and rare classic genre films from Scandinavia; a special selection from the world’s leading fantasy film nation in Planet Japan; Luca Guadagnino’s Suspiria headlining our annual Day of the Dead horror marathon; and cult British filmmaker Peter Strickland’s latest masterwork In Fabric.
It’s close to Christmas in the sleepy Scottish town of Little Haven and while Anna dreams of traveling the world, her widowed father wants her to apply for university. When a zombie apocalypse suddenly threatens the town, Anna and her friends must fight, slash and sing their way to survival as they battle hordes of the undead to reach their loved ones. Crossing Shaun of the Dead with High School Musical and reminiscent of the Buffy episode ‘Once More With Feeling’, this comedy horror Christmas zombie musical is sure to be a future cult classic.

‘Today, she dances down the street, swinging on light poles like Gene Kelly, totally oblivious that most of the people she knows are dead. Hey, teen angst is all-consuming. Like its star, Anna and the Apocalypse merrily charges through danger. It’s a genre mash-up populated with cliches.’ Indiewire.

With his girlfriend Annji, Nick visits his parents’ home on Christmas Eve for the first time in years. Awaking on Christmas morning, the dysfunctional family find a mysterious black substance surrounding their house. The only information is an ominous message on the TV: ‘Stay Indoors and Await Further Instructions’. As they descend into paranoia and accusations, the television exerts an ever more sinister grip on them and their disagreements escalate into bloody carnage. Following The Disappeared (LIFF 2008), Johnny Kevorkian returns with a claustrophobic, Cronenbergian nightmare.

‘Families tend to always argue when they get together over Christmas, it seems to generally bring out the worst in people. Now imagine locking those families together in one house and then dousing them with fear and paranoia. You’re left with the most extreme and horrible scenario imaginable, which is what AFI shows us.’ Jonny Kavorkian, Director.
Once upon a time there were two children brought up by the same woman – Azur, the son of a nobleman, and Asmar, the son of the nanny who tells them both many enchanting stories. One dark day fate cruelly separates them. ‘A visual masterpiece that makes the most of its Islamic art influences.’ (Empire)

‘People have often asked me how I make children’s films. My secret is that I never make children’s films, because children are not interested in films designed purely for them! Children need to learn about the world and discover new things... I cannot make a film which wouldn’t interest me today. I’m the first viewer of my work, both as an adult and a child, because I have all ages inside me!’ Michel Ocelot, Director.

Caring for his uncle with dementia, Taka lodges in an idyllic thatched cottage in the countryside. When the uncle’s son Mitsuaki returns, his quiet life of caring and bongo-playing seems in doubt, until he and childhood friend Sho are reunited in friendship. But unwelcome visits by a nature-obsessed family from Tokyo threaten to overturn this bucolic existence. At heart a gentle pastoral comedy and satire of romanticised country life, in the hands of Tadashi Nagayama (director of 2016’s Journey of the Tortoise), events start to take a very unexpected direction.

‘I’m inspired from uneasiness and anger in daily life. More specifically, I think society and the politics today are discriminating against inactive people, who are not favoured with opportunities. The main character in this film is a middle-aged man with no steady job, no dream, and not willing to build a family. I wanted to show that even someone who is considered unproductive and useless for society, also has his own definition of happiness.’ Tadashi Nagayama, Director.

A delicious, head-spinning meld of body horror, Nordic noir, myth and romance, Border is an almighty ‘WTF?’ of a film that packs emotion and philosophical smarts. Broken-hearted Jung embarks on a quest to reunite with his love Maria, cruelly murdered by the titanic overlord Little Jesus. A big hit at Fantasia 2018, we present the UK Premiere of the full TV series in one mind-crushing feature.

‘From French animators Bobbypills, it’s a twisted piece of criticism about heroes needing dark motivations, mocking the tidy values that are imparted after violent showdowns in a morning cartoon episode...Unpredictability makes this twisted series shine; it’s always darker, grosser and funnier than you expect it to be.’ Roger Ebert.com.
Dead Mountaineer’s Hotel Fanomenon Retro / Estonia 100

An epic piece of ‘Soviet Kitsch’, the Dead Mountaineer’s Hotel – at one point Estonia’s only example of genre cinema – is a wonderfully crazy and very 70s attempt at a sci-fi movie, based on the novel by Arkady and Boris Strugatsky (Roadside Picnic). When a policeman gets stuck in a hotel in the Alps after an avalanche cuts it off from the outside world, he soon discovers that everything is not as it seems. With some brilliant touches – including Sven Grünberg’s evocative electronic score – this is a unique and bizarre genre curiosity.

‘Irksome, dazzling, baffling, eerie, luminous, silly, and unique... It’s easily the best Estonian sci-fi detective story I’ve ever seen. And yes, it’s the only one.’ David Cairns, MUBI.

In Fabric

Director of Berberian Sound Studio and The Duke of Burgundy, cult British filmmaker Peter Strickland returns with a haunting ghost story set against the backdrop of a busy winter sales period in a department store. In Fabric follows the life of a cursed dress as it passes from person to person, with devastating consequences. ‘A sensuous, surreal and hysterical tour de force... Never has a garment of clothing invoked such terror and fascination, from the explicit erotic power of its crimson red, to the way that it eerily hangs in space, like a ghostly voyeur.’ (CineVue)

‘I felt I was moving more and more towards objects in my films, whether it was oscillators or lingerie and it didn’t feel like such a big leap to eventually feature a dress as a main character... That a piece of fabric can provoke feelings of empowerment, desire, disgust, control, sadness or inadequacy in different people is remarkable.’ Peter Strickland, Director

Inuyashiki
Planet Japan

From the original manga and anime series comes a brand new live action sci-fi superhero showdown from Shinsuke Sato. The ineffectual father of an uncaring family and with even more bad news on the way, Inuyashiki is suddenly struck by a mysterious explosion, awaking to discover his body has acquired fantastically powerful robotic innards. Unsure of the extent of his abilities, but resolving to do good, he is unaware that a teenager, Shishigami, was also caught in the same explosion. Shishigami may have similar powers, but he harbours more psychopathic tendencies.

‘In all cases, I take a lot of time preparing before shooting, and I try to figure out what the core scenes are. For example, what the final fight scene is going to look like, where the suspense is going to come in, but there is a lot of difficulty in approaching the visual and story elements. What I do is that I shoot quite a lot of things on video, make detailed plans, and relay this information to my staff to make sure that they know what needs to be done.’

Shinisuke Sato, Director.

Killing God
Fanorama

A couple hire a remote country house to celebrate New Year’s Eve with their extended, dysfunctional family. As celebrations begin a strange, homeless dwarf appears on their doorstep, exacerbating the existing family tensions. The uninvited guest claims that he is God and, angry with mankind, is going to kill every human on the planet at sunrise, sparing only two. The five guests have to decide who will live, but is the dwarf who he says he is and is the impending apocalypse real? A pitch black horror comedy about morality, love, infidelity and religious beliefs.

‘Killing God includes the loss of limb, of faith and of life, but never, delightfully, loses its cunning sense of humour. This is a first rate slash-fest; A sordy Scooby Doo story, as full of dark laughs as it is of dark shadows.’ The Hollywood News.
12 year old Henry is left with his estranged grandfather Jacob at his remote Canadian farmhouse while his parents deal with a family emergency. Initially gruff and overbearing, Jacob bonds with his grandson over baseball as he teaches Henry how to throw different styles of pitches. When unexpected circumstances mean that Henry finds himself alone on the farm, an overly friendly neighbour turns out to be a potentially deadly threat, and the boy must use all his ingenuity to survive. A deadly version of Home Alone that consistently surprises and delivers plenty of suspense.

“We’ve been able to construct a script here that has all the elements of a murder-mystery thriller in it, slight horror aspects,” he said. “It’s humanity at its worst in some places...I’m real proud of this film.’ Michael Ironside, Actor.

From acclaimed director Mamoru Hosoda (Summer Wars, Wolf Children), Mirai is a daringly original story of love passed down through generations. When four-year-old Kun meets his new baby sister, his world is turned upside down. Named Mirai (meaning ‘future’), the baby quickly wins the hearts of Kun’s entire family. As his mother returns to work, and his father struggles to run the household, Kun becomes increasingly jealous of the baby. Mirai is a sumptuous, magical and emotionally soaring adventure about the ties that bring families together and make us who we are.

Perhaps we choose animation to tell a story about children because we want to go back to our childhood, and to escape from our social responsibilities to live freely like children. Maybe we want to see the world sparkle with wonder again...I believe that there are infinite possibilities in animated films. I want to keep challenging those possibilities to make movies that people haven’t seen before.’ Mamoru Hosoda, Director.
Nightmare Cinema
Night of the Dead

Five strangers are drawn to a run down cinema where they find themselves on screen, starring in films that depict their deepest fears and darkest secrets. From a twisted take on the slasher in the woods story to the risks of plastic surgery, these five dark, disturbing, gory and blackly funny tales are curated by The Projectionist, in a creepy performance from Mickey Rourke. Master of Horror, Mick Garris, brings together four other revered horror directors (Alejandro Brugués, Joe Dante, Ryûhei Kitamura & David Slade) in this anthology film reminiscent of the classic Creepshow films.

Directors: Alejandro Brugués, Joe Dante, Mick Garris, Ryûhei Kitamura David Slade.

Writers: Sandra Becerril, Alejandro Brugués, Lawrence C. Connolly, Mick Garris, Richard Christian Matheson, David Slade.

Nightshooters
Fanorama

A hapless film crew accidentally witness a gangland killing while making a low-budget martial arts zombie movie in a disused office block. Realising they’ve been seen, the gang boss sends his goons after the terrified filmmakers who must use all their wits and skills to survive the night. Marc Price, famous for making Colin (LIFF 2008), the £45 zombie film, will present his inventive and entertaining horror crime thriller comedy action movie and give a post-screening Q&A along with cast and crew (along with a few extra surprises).

‘Blending elements of the crime caper, the chase flick, gore-horror and the revenge movie, Nightshooters then moves through a series of set pieces as the thugs from the gang discover the “film students” make for far tougher opponents than they had anticipated... Amidst the bloodletting and mayhem, there’s an emotional texture too.’

Rich Cross, Starburst.
November
Fanorama / Estonia 100

The dark myths and legends of Pagan Estonia are given free reign in Rainer Sarnet’s evocative tale of a medieval village which dabbles in witchcraft to survive the long winter. With some stunning black and white cinematography from Mart Taniel, this is a deliciously dark melding of historical treatise and bleak fairy tale that is spotted with pitch-black humour. A remarkable cinematic experience that delves into a national psyche in which the black nights at least give hope for brighter days to come. “A bone-chilling, hallucinatory tour de force.” (Village Voice)

“November is based on Estonian fairy tales where the main motive is greed. They are tales about the fox who cheats the wolf or steals milk from the old woman. The fairy tales of my childhood are more scary and sad than bright and happy and that influenced this film. I was a little bit afraid this story would remain very specific to an Estonian sense of self-irony. But we are all living in the same world nowadays, looking together for something beautiful that helps us to survive in a pragmatic but greedy world.” Rainer Sarnet, Director.

One Cut of the Dead
Night of the Dead

Hack film director Higurashi (whose motto is ‘fast, cheap, but average’) is hired to make a zombie film in an abandoned WWII Japanese facility, allegedly used for human experiments by the military. In the middle of the shoot they are attacked by real zombies, much to the delight of the director who is determined to include the carnage in his film. Opening with an epic 37 minute single take, this low budget film challenges the tired genre and delivers a truly unique fast-paced, laugh-out-loud, meta-as-possible zombie comedy.

“This film was so hard, it was nothing but trouble trying to make it! It was so difficult while we were filming, honestly. In the script we had planned some things to go wrong for the fictional crew, but on top of that we had a lot of other things that went wrong while we were filming the one shot. There’s a moment where blood splashed on the camera, it looked planned but that happened completely by chance and someone really had to wipe it off the screen. We had planned for some things to go wrong, and then we had other things go wrong in reality, so we ended up amalgamating the two into the film.” Shinichiro Ueda, Director.

Third Window
In this debut anime feature from Hiroyasu Ishida, Aoyama is a serious 10 year-old boy who records all of his day-to-day experiences in his notebook. One day in May, penguins inexplicably appear in his home town, despite it being located a long way from the sea. When Aoyama sees ‘Big Sis’ drop a soft drink can which inexplicably turns into a penguin, he decides to investigate and resolve the mystery behind these strange events. ‘Highly imaginative and definitely original, Penguin Highway will fill viewers of all ages with wonder.’ (Eye for Film)

‘I wanted to draw with all my passion a story about a pure and earnest young boy. I wanted to show the beauty of the world that the boy sees. Penguin Highway was the perfect work for that. It is a very charming work, but for me, it also had many parts I was worried about and the more I thought about it the more I wondered if I would be able to depict the real intentions the author had with the book, even though I was focusing on the source. However, in the end, my passion to turn the story into an anime overwhelmed my worries.’ Hiroyasu Ishida, Director.

Philip, a disgraced puppeteer, returns to his childhood home carrying a large holdall that contains his latest creation, a truly disturbing nightmarish creature. Arriving at the house he finds his stepfather still living in squalor and is forced to confront the dark secrets that have tortured him for his entire life. Matthew Holness’s debut feature film is bleak and creepy with a stunning performance from Sean Harris as the tormented Philip. Guaranteed to fill you with dread, Possum will stay with you long after the end credits have rolled.

‘In terms of filmmaking itself, I think that horror is perhaps the most malleable genre we have, the most honest and potentially the most progressive. It’s the best genre in which to discuss what’s wrong in the world and, when it’s done with sincerity and passion, reveals and informs as much as any other work of art. And it’s the ideal genre to hone your skills as a director because scaring an audience is hard, and you really know when you’ve screwed up.’ Matthew Holness, Director.
Skewering its targets in every direction from fat cat capitalists to racist institutions, the story follows Cassius Green (the brilliant Lakeith Stanfield) who gets a new job at a call centre and is coached into immediate success by a veteran colleague (Danny Glover), inciting him to ‘use his white voice’. Riley escalates the satire from there, ricocheting from comic vignettes to confrontational agitprop to demented fantasy, in a wildly inventive, hugely entertaining cinematic ride.

“When I set out to write the movie, there was nothing in my head that was fantastical. But as I took the journey with Cassius I realised that some of the things I wanted to talk about, the bigger ideas, could start feeling heavy-handed or the dialogue could feel corny. In trying to avoid cliché, I realised that if I bent the reality of the world that was there, it actually drew attention to that parallel point in our actual reality. I think that what I tried to convey in this is that through all the craziness, there’s an optimism that comes when you realize there’s a way to fight back.’ Boots Riley, Director.

The original Superman movie has been a fan favorite since it first flew into cinemas in December 1978. LIFF presents a special 40th anniversary screening of Richard Donner’s superhero epic in the wonderful concert hall setting of Leeds Town Hall, perfect for that rousing John Williams score. ‘Superman is a pure delight, a wondrous combination of all the old-fashioned things we never really get tired of: adventure and romance, heroes and villains, earthshaking special effects, and – you know what else? Wit.’ (Roger Ebert, 1978).

‘I loved doing Superman, but it was tough. You’re right, because we did it with Band-Aids and bailing wire, you know? It took us almost a year to have a shot where everybody applauded and cried when we saw Christopher fly for the first time in the Fortress of Solitude. We had tried front-projection shots. We had rear-projection shots — and, with those, the wires would always jiggle and weave, the tracks would never be right, and the body wouldn’t hold up, or the cape would look wrong. Then, one day, it was 100-percent perfect, and we went berserk.’ Richard Donner, Director.
Suspiria
Day of the Dead

Susie Bannion (Dakota Johnson) is a brilliantly talented dancer from Ohio who joins a famous Berlin dance school led by her idol Madame Blanc (Tilda Swinton in one of three roles she plays in the film). Replacing another dancer who went missing, Susie starts to suspect that there are nefarious forces at work at the school and her sanity, and life, may be at risk. Luca Guadagnino (Call Me By Your Name, LIFF 2017) takes Argento’s brash horror masterpiece and reimagines it, bringing new depth to the story while honouring the original.

“For me, making films is a natural act, and I do what I believe I need to do, so of course it is interiorized, my knowledge of [the original] film and my respect for it, but at the same time, it is a part of me and who I am that I pursue what I want… I believe that, when you do a movie, you always have to have a zone of darkness, a zone of incomprehension, in order to completely let yourself not resist the process of making your film. You have to submit to the movie happening.’ Luca Guadagnino, Director.

Tampopo
Fanomenon Retro / BFI Comedy Genius

Trucking stranger Goro rides into town and takes shelter in a failing out-of-the-way ramen restaurant. He takes pity on the downtrodden proprietor Tampopo, and with a diverse team of local noodle, broth and topping experts sets out to turn Tampopo’s tired old joint into the finest in Tokyo. Into this light soupy story many satirical ingredients are mixed: Tampopo’s buffet of deliciousness riffs on Japanese corporate culture, internationalism, domestic relations, cinema and always sex. One of the best Japanese films of the 1980s, Tampopo is impossible to watch without dreaming of hearty post-movie eats.

‘I made this movie entirely out of things I like. Ramen noodles, Westerns, some parts of Tokyo, and these actors. A long time ago, I had this idea of making a film concerning human behavior about food, because a sensual movie could be made from such a theme. I began collecting episodes, but thought there would be no way to string them all into a workable film. Then I considered doing something about a noodle shop, and doing it as a Western. But I still wanted to fit those episodes in. So I thought of the Buñuel film The Phantom of Liberty, the kind of film where the last thing of the scene before leads to the next event — that kind of quick-change thing.’ Jûzô Itami, Director.
Premiering at the Annecy International Animation Festival and winning best feature for children at Anima Mundi 2018, Tito and the Birds is garnering praise wherever it’s screened, and now LIFF gives the film its English Premiere. This stunning, painterly feature animation is simply a joy to behold on the big screen. Tito is a 10-year-old boy with an estranged father and a keen interest in inventing. When a crippling epidemic begins to spread, Tito and his friends suspect that his father’s research into birds may hold the solution.

‘I wanted to make a beautiful film, but something more marketable and fun. People would tell me: “No, you can’t do that.” It was as if arthouse had to be tense and difficult. It’s a middle ground. I think there is a bigger space; at least I hope there is, for something that is more sophisticated in terms of [how an animation] looks, but at the same time is interesting and fun.’ Gustavo Steinberg, Director.

‘I am a cat. As yet, I have no name’. So begins the chronicles of Nana, a stray cat who has adopted its own master, Satoru, as he sets out to revisit friends from his past, with a request that Nana doesn’t yet understand. Partly narrated by Nana herself and based on the enormously successful Japanese novel by Hiro Arikawa, The Travelling Cat Chronicles is a humorous and tender exploration of how small acts of kindness and sacrifice can make a difference in the unexpected events of people’s lives.

‘The Travelling Cat Chronicles continues the Japanese tradition of folkloric tales that celebrate simple values such as self-sacrifice and friendship. It has the warmth, painterly touch, and tenderness of a Studio Ghibli film.’ Financial Times.
Despite warnings from hermit Old Man Lucky-Monkey, Bobby, his friend Akkun and Derrick the cat explore the local mountains, where they discover a mysterious alien invasion-themed amusement park. Little do they or we know the truly deranged horror and grotesquery awaiting these innocents. Filmed live in ‘Geki-mation’ – painstakingly hand-painted cardboard cutouts with in-camera effects – this colourful fairytale aesthetic erupts in a torrent of bizarre mutilation, child-robot hybrids, bodily fluids and forest animals. A uniquely entertaining, disturbing and unforgettable film.

‘A one-of-a-kind animated film with direction, screenplay and cinematography handled by newcomer creator Ujicha, who resides in Kyoto and pioneers his audacious visuals are anchored in “gekimation,” in which cut-out pictures move against the background which also features live action footage.’ Japan Foundation.

Shot in the Arctic Circle’s snowy expanses, Erik Blomberg’s The White Reindeer is a marvel of film fantasy from Finland made in 1952. Pirita, played by the director’s wife, Mirjami Kuosmanen, is a bewitched young woman wed to an often-absent reindeer herder. Longing for affection, she carries out a sacrifice to empower a local shaman’s love potion and becomes cursed, transforming into a white reindeer by night and drinking the blood of local hunters. The White Reindeer blends documentary travelogue with avant-garde experimentation and produces an art house horror film without compare.

‘A prizewinner at the 1953 Cannes Film Festival, shot for next to nothing on location in Finnish Lapland and filled with local non-actors, this first feature by cinematographer and battlefield cameraman Erik Blomberg is a quasi-ethnographic exercise in magic neorealism. White Reindeer’s singing introduction, reindeer race meet-cute, pervasive post-dubbing, and folkloric digressions (a whole village simultaneously forging its sacred spears), not to mention its hearty Nordic atmosphere, create an uncannily exotic experience.’ Village Voice.

LIFF is dedicated to showcasing the breadth of cinema history from celebrated classics to rarely-seen gems as well as supporting outstanding new films.

This year for the first time, LIFF presents a programme section focused on a single theme: a wide-ranging selection of films from the past and present that all take place within 24 hours.

In this extensive programme spanning genres, decades and continents – and also including installations and an exhibition – time heightens tension, conveys the fleeting nature of love, draws us into inner worlds and shows us life unfolding.
At the close of a murder trial, the life of the teenage hispanic suspect is in the hands of the 12 white jurors. With apparently damning evidence lined up against the boy, a preliminary vote shows only one doubtful juror standing against eleven who would have him hanged. 90 tense, sweaty minutes ensue in which prejudices are confronted, moralities are revealed, and the vagaries of justice are rigorously exposed. A great ensemble film – every player from Henry Fonda's upstanding doubter to Lee J. Cobb's tetchy racist helps shape a fully absorbing whole.

‘For some reason, I still remember that I made 387 setups in 12 Angry Men... The cutting tempo was accelerating steadily during the movie but would break into a gallop in the last thirty-five minutes or so. This increasing tempo helped enormously both in making the story more exciting and in raising the audience’s awareness that the picture was compressing further in space and time.’
Sidney Lumet, Director.

A rare chance to see this major work of Uruguayan cinema. Co-directed by Juan Pablo Rebella and Pablo Stoll, this low-budget, laid-back slacker comedy follows the misadventures of three teenage friends on one lazy summer’s day in Montevideo. Leche, Javi, and Seba are still up from the night before, drifting around town, drinking beer and avoiding responsibility. Echoing the films of Richard Linklater, Kevin Smith and early Jim Jarmusch, Rebella and Stoll combine these influences to create a unique portrait of urban life in Uruguay. With style and humour, 25 Watts perfectly captures the boredom of youth.

‘25 Watts is one of very few features ever to have been made in (Uruguay) – no more than 20 in its history, and less than three in the last two years… The country's relative obscurity is given props in the film, when it's revealed that there is only one Uruguayan in the Guinness Book of World Records – a guy who clapped his hands for five days straight.’ Mark Peranson, Indiewire.
After Hours
Time Frames Night Shifts

Over one long wild night, meek computer programmer Paul attempts endlessly to go home but is thwarted at each and every attempt by a series of macabre coincidences and mishaps. Paul’s evening starts out promisingly – a possible date is on the cards. But then he loses his taxi fare en-route, a fateful event that is only the first in a series of bizarre twists. Martin Scorsese’s often-overlooked cult comedy is a witty, deftly-spun yarn of nefarious New York paranoia, and trippy insight into NYC’s tribal 1980s headspace. For night-owls everywhere.

‘After Hours is to some extent a parody of Hitchcock’s style... The scene when Paul is running with the invitation in his hand – there’s a shot of the hand with the ground below – basically this refers back to a moment in Marnie where she’s holding the gun going to shoot the horse. When I first saw Marnie, that shot remained in my mind and I kept going back.’ Martin Scorsese, Director.

American Graffiti
Time Frames Matinees

On the cusp of independence, several high school friends in Modesto, California spend the final night of their 1962 summer vacation around the strip mall - getting together, breaking up, having fun. George Lucas’ second feature cuts nimbly between several criss-crossing vignettes as the friends spread out, re-group and intersect. With its attractive veneer of pop music, car culture and lives on the up, American Graffiti is full of the optimistic present. It’s exhilarating cinema that made careers of many of its stars, and it all points at tantalising futures.

‘After I did American Graffiti, and it was successful, it was a big moment for me because I really did sit down with myself and say, Okay, now I am a director. Now I know I can get a job. I can work in this industry, and apply my trade, and express my ideas on things and be creative in a way that I enjoy.’ George Lucas, Director.
Before Sunrise
Time Frames
Breakfast Screening

The start of Richard Linklater’s Before trilogy, Before Sunrise is a romantic classic, effortlessly evoking the transience of young love. The film captures a few hours when two strangers, Jesse and Celine (Ethan Hawke and Julie Delpy), meet by chance and spend an evening wandering the streets of Vienna. This highlight of 90s indie cinema is beautifully realised, and one of Linklater’s first experiments with time, contrasting the knowledge that it may be the only night they’ll share together, with the feeling they have all the time in the world.

‘I think I have a low threshold of what a movie can be. So I’m always thinking ‘Can you make the whole movie about that?’ ...Every film’s different, every story is so different. But I think I’ve always been attracted to try to take something minimal and to maximize it cinematically. To find out if I can I really go all the way with one idea.’ Richard Linklater, Director.

The Birthday Party
Time Frames
by William Friedkin

Before he attained legendary status as the director of French Connection and The Exorcist, William Friedkin directed a fervent screen version of Harold Pinter’s queasy, kitchen sink-gothic chamber piece, The Birthday Party. Set entirely in a scuzzy seaside boarding house through 24 hours and featuring incredible performances by Robert Shaw, Patrick Magee and Dandy Nichols, Friedkin escalates the power dynamics of his characters to fever pitch, throwing in a few unusual, cinematic touches that elevate the enterprise above filmed theatre. The result is a strange and nightmarish cult classic.

‘(Harold Pinter’s) work – called comedies of menace when it first appeared – was very influential on me. The year I spent working with Harold is the year I learned everything I know about drama. He prepared me for almost everything I did afterwards... He wrote instinctively. He didn’t plot. He told me that with The Birthday Party, one day he woke up and the characters just came through the door.’ William Friedkin, Director.

Blackmail
Time Frames Free Event

This suspenseful masterpiece from a young Hitchcock is regarded as one of the greatest British silents. Made on the cusp of the sound era, the film was made in two versions: silent and with sound. The 5 November showing of the silent film screens with live organ accompaniment. During a violent attack, Alice White (Anny Ondra) kills a man in self-defence, and is blackmailed by a witness to the killing. Displaying much of the developing ‘Hitchcockian’ style, this skillful thriller features many memorable sequences, including a stunning final chase over the British Library Reading Room dome.

‘Hitchcock famously shot Blackmail in both silent and sound versions, but I have always preferred the former. […] The sound Blackmail is ground-breaking, clever, chilling, with a perfectly serviceable score. But the silent version is, for me, the greatest British silent film: a mature and adult drama, swift, deft and complex, all in all a more rewarding experience for a modern audience than its sound counterpart.’ Neil Brand, Sight & Sound.

The Boys in the Band
Time Frames
by William Friedkin

William Friedkin’s explosive screen adaptation of Mart Crowley’s off-broadway hit is a landmark in queer cinema, the first major American feature to revolve entirely around gay characters full of impassioned performances and cutting dialogue. Set over a single day, the story builds to a birthday party hosted by Michael in which every guest is a gay man until a surprise visit from his straitlaced old college buddy Alan throws everything into disarray. Attempts at deception fall apart through a series of party games and bitter confrontations that have devastating consequences.

‘I went to New York and saw the play which I thought was great… it was one of the most difficult films I’d ever directed. I decided to go with the stage company because you would’ve had to look for years to find a group of guys as great as they were… A performance for the stage is not a performance for film. It had to be totally reconceived.’ William Friedkin, Director.
In One A.M., created for Mutual Films in 1916, Chaplin’s solo performance is a tour-de-force of comic ingenuity. Chaplin plays a wealthy gentleman, returning home at the titular hour from a night of debauchery. Before he can make it upstairs to bed, he must first battle a series of household obstacles.

In Cleo from 5 to 7, an exemplary film of the Nouvelle Vague, Agnès Varda’s radical second feature is an innovative exploration of female identity set against the backdrop of a vibrant sixties Paris. The film chronicles two hours in the life of pop singer Cléo (an iconic performance by Corrine Marchand), as she anxiously awaits the test results of a biopsy. Aimlessly roaming the Parisian streets, she encounters several friends and strangers, including a soldier on leave from the Algerian war. Blending vérité and melodrama, Varda creates an arresting portrait of one woman’s inner journey as she confronts mortality.

‘I wanted to make people feel the passage of time which is why I decided to make the film in real time. I wanted to get across the feeling that in difficult times, a conversation or a precious moment can occur and change one’s perspective… I receive at least one letter every day from someone who says they like the way the film has accompanied their lives’ Agnès Varda, Director.

Called in to work on his day off, twentysomething Dante spends his day at the Quick Stop convenience store. Next door is his best friend Randall, who is supposed to be minding the video shop but is much more interested in just hanging out and talking trash. As mostly unwelcome customers come and go, our slacker heroes riff hilariously on topics ranging from sexual mores, to the nature of love, to Return of the Jedi... Light on plot yet bursting with energetic pottymouth wit, Clerks is the first and still the best of Kevin Smith’s ‘views askew’.

‘Clerks gets called a cult classic, or the seminal indie film of the 1990s. But I didn’t set out to make that. I wanted to do a film in which the characters sat around talking about sex and Star Wars, just like my friends and I did, and made people laugh. For it to become what it did, and have all these cool but daunting labels attached to it, really clouded its original purpose.’ Kevin Smith, Director.

Daughters of the Dust
Time Frames Matinees

A film of breathtaking beauty, this visionary first feature directed and written by Julie Dash is a poetic portrait of black womanhood and a landmark American independent cinema. Set at the turn of the century, the story revolves around the women of a Gullah family (descendants of freed slaves), as they prepare to migrate from their Sea Island home to the American mainland, leaving their land and legacy behind. With sensuous cinematography and a sweeping score, Dash has created a rich and vital portrait of African American history.

‘I was determined to depict the metaphor of the period of enslavement in a way it had never been seen before. So I chose to have the hands permanently stained blue by working the indigo fields. Of course, it would have worn off by then. But it’s the stain. Kind of Shakespearean. In the sea islands of the South first it was indigo, then it was rice.’ Julie Dash, Director.
Dazed and Confused
Time Frames Matinees

Richard Linklater’s second feature is a modern classic and surely one of the best high school movies ever made. Set over one intense day and night on the first day of a new school year, a fantastic young ensemble cast portrays seniors and freshmen, sports stars andstoners, straight A-students and dropouts, across multiple immersive storylines. Many would go on to stardom like Ben Affleck and Matthew McConaughey. The film conveys a powerful sense of watershed moments, transforming young lives and opening up to the joys, fears and confusion of adult life.

‘On Dazed and Confused, where’s the car wreck? Where’s the teen pregnancy? It’s amazing we got that movie made. But when you think back, the essence of your life is the little stuff, the little things you remember. I’m really counting on the cumulative effect of all this adding up to something, a feeling, an experience, for it to really mirror the ebb and flow of life.’ Richard Linklater, Director.

The Docks of New York
Time Frames Finale

Josef Von Sternberg’s silent masterpiece is a vivid and sensual melodrama set in the New York docklands in the years before prohibition. George Bancroft plays roughneck coal stoker Bill Roberts who gets into trouble during a brief shore leave when he falls for a wise and weary dance-hall girl, Mae, played by Betty Compson. Despite the conventions of melodrama, the intense love story is brought to life with naturalistic flair that puts it well ahead of its time and the expressionist cinematography prefigures the film noir of the 40s. Featuring live accompaniment by pianist Jonathan Best.

‘It exemplifies virtually every quality of von Sternberg’s films. It is theatrical, with complex but enclosed sets; it makes maximum use of lighting and atmospherics; it is nominally a melodrama but adds unexpected depth to a flimsy outline… It is possible to watch the whole picture without being exceptionally aware that it is silent. It is dated in nearly every particular, and yet it is somehow eternal.’ Luc Sante, Criterion.
Sidney Lumet balances suspense, violence and humour in a piercing portrait of one man’s devastating fall based on real-life events. Al Pacino is heartbreakingly real as smart if self-destructive Sonny whose plan to rob the local bank to fund his male lover’s sex change goes absurdly, publicly wrong. Accompanied only by his far from ideal accomplice, Sal, Sonny resorts to kidnapping some of the bank’s employees when he realises all the money had been removed before his arrival. As the heist attracts a media circus as well as the police, their notoriety grows and chances for survival shrink.

“When Al Pacino asked him during a scene, ‘Is there any country you want to go to?’ John Cazale improvised his answer by saying, after long thought, ‘Wyoming.’ To me that was the funniest, saddest line in the movie, and my favorite, because in the script he wasn’t supposed to say anything. I almost ruined the take because I started to laugh so hard… but it was a brilliant, brilliant, ad lib.’

Sidney Lumet, Director.

Do the Right Thing
Time Frames Matinees

Spike Lee’s powerful look at race in America was the most controversial and talked about film of 1989. It’s the hottest day of the year in the Bedford-Stuyvesant neighbourhood of Brooklyn, and as the heat rises, racial tensions simmer to boiling point. Mookie (Spike Lee) delivers pizzas for Sal (Danny Aiello), who runs a restaurant with his sons. Hostility builds when pizzeria regular Buggin’ Out confronts Sal about his ‘Wall of Fame’ that only includes white actors. As the hot summer’s day progresses and frictions intensify, arguments soon escalate to violence.

‘It was shot over eight weeks, but it couldn’t look like that – it was supposed to take place in one day. That’s hard to do. And the challenge we gave the cinematographer Ernest Dickerson, production designer Wynn Thomas, costume designer Ruth Carter: We wanted audiences to feel the heat. I wanted people to be sweating from watching this film, even though they might be seeing it in air conditioning.’ Spike Lee, Director.
I AM THE LAW! Forget about ‘that’ Stallone film and immerse yourself in the work that got the classic British comic character Judge Dredd right. With its almost real time setting, Dredd is not only a brilliantly-conceived example of genre cinema, it’s also a great dystopian sci-fi realised in a uniquely British style. While it had a muted release, Dredd, written and produced by Alex Garland (Ex Machina / Annihilation), went on to become a cult favourite. During LIFF 2018 you can experience it in the dramatic setting of Leeds Town Hall.

‘Everybody was very passionate about the film. The detail came from everyone’s passion, to be true to the source material. Alex Garland was fanatically passionate about that, the art department too… From the people who designed the bike and the suit to the set, everyone immersed themselves in that world, to do justice to the comics. The comics are really beautiful. Beautifully written, powerful stories…’ Pete Travis, Director.

Directed by Canadian film-maker Sidney J. Furie, this forgotten work of the British New Wave is a frank and sensitive look at sexual anxiety and inexperience. Don Borisenko (hailed as the Canadian James Dean) plays David, a young US fighter pilot stationed in England during World War II. When his friend Mike suffers an emasculating injury, and subsequently commits suicide, David is plunged into psychological turmoil, afraid to die before he loses his virginity. This bold and compassionate study of wounded masculinity, male impotency and the trauma of war, deserves to be far better known.

‘The truth is that, whether your film is about a great mythological character or it’s a little movie that nobody will probably ever hear of, you have to do right. You have to approach it like it’s the most important thing in the world. But filmmakers are like gunslingers, and you don’t win every duel.’ Sidney J. Furie, Director.
The Ear
Time Frames Night Shifts

Karel Kachyna’s unforgettable, incendiary drama was banned by Czech authorities immediately after its release in 1970 as a searing indictment of life under a totalitarian regime. The film uses flashbacks to interrogate a single night in the life of a high ranking bureaucrat Ludvik, who returns home with his wife after an awkward reception where it becomes clear that other officials have been arrested. The couple find their house is bugged and with a deteriorating relationship already fraying the edges, spend a long, sleepless night tearing the wires from the walls and strips off each other.

‘Kachyňa brings the ideas of Orwell’s 1984 to life in a way that is disturbing because Ludvik and Anna’s house looks like it could be anyone’s. This isn’t some dystopian future metropolis; it’s the suburbs of your city, or the quiet neighborhood you pass through on your way to the grocery store. And the characters in The Ear aren’t dispirited automatons; they’re everyday shmucks like you or me.’ Hollywood Film Threat.

Fail-Safe
Sidney Lumet: Time Frames Master

An unbearably tense psychological thriller from Hollywood master Sidney Lumet, Fail Safe is similar in its premise to its famous Cold War contemporary Dr Strangelove, but played deadly straight. Taking place over 24 hours and making the most of its against the clock suspense, the American President (in a carefully measured performance by Henry Fonda) tries to call back a squadron of bombers, deployed to destroy Moscow because of a computer error. But their sophisticated fail-safe system prevents him from aborting the attack and he’s left with the impossible task of convincing the Soviets not to retaliate.

‘Fail Safe was a very successful novel and had been out for some time… After years of government assurances that there could be no such thing as an atomic accident, obviously that was something that none of us believed and both the book and, we hope, the picture would be something that would open all of that to discussion and questioning.’ Sidney Lumet, Director.
The Fire Within
Time Frames Matinees

The haunting and stylish The Fire Within is Louis Malle’s darkest, most incendiary film, tracing the last day in the life of writer Alain Leroy, a self-destructive writer who decides to kill himself. Maurice Ronet is masterful as Leroy, using his last 24 hours to track down wayward friends, whose superficial lifestyles give stark contrast to his dark intents, both of which are captured beautifully in austere, high contrast black and white cinematography. Louis Malle himself called The Fire Within ‘the first of his films he was completely happy with’ and it’s matured beautifully into a classic of 60s French cinema.

‘It’s perhaps the first film where I was really in control… in terms of style, it was with Feu Follet that I really found what seemed right for me, the best form to express what I had in mind. It’s very austere and the camera is unobtrusive. I had a strong script. We were fully prepared, so I felt confident enough to experiment and improvise.’ Louis Malle, Director.

The Guilty
New Time Frames

In the claustrophobic confines of an Emergency Services call centre, nervous cop Asger begins his shift by dispatching judgemental advice to callers. When a woman calls from a car in which she’s confined, Asger snaps to attention: this conversation is far more urgent – and ultimately more intriguing – than the rest. Though The Guilty barely moves from its single office location, it paints a detailed picture that evolved in real time, in the imagination. A taut, tough, twisty thriller and a masterclass in minimal performance, The Guilty’s simple premise belies a complex, knotty psychodrama.

‘I got the idea for the film when I stumbled across a real life 911 call from a kidnapped woman. The woman was traveling by car, and since she was sitting next to her kidnapper she was speaking in codes. At first I was just gripped by the suspense of the call, as any listener would. But then I started reflecting on what made it so intriguing.’ Gustav Möller, Director.
Happy New Year, Colin Burstead.
New Time Frames

Ben Wheatley shows his chops as Britain’s most versatile director, following heist thriller Free Fire with this penetrating dysfunctional family drama. The film was shot quickly under the radar earlier in the year and the style suits the subject, following an increasingly fractious New Year’s party at a stately home, organised by the titular Colin for his extended family and derailed by a surprise appearance from his estranged brother David. It bristles with cutting lines and edgy performances from an outstanding ensemble cast including Neil Maskell, Sam Riley, Hayley Squires, and Doon Mackichan.

‘I really liked the idea of a character who was asked to do something by everybody, and then he does it, and then suddenly everyone changes ninety degrees and says, ‘No, that wasn’t what we wanted at all.’ I mean, that seems to be like life generally; that you just read it wrong and get it wrong and then it’s a rearguard action of fighting your way back out of the corner.’ Ben Wheatley, Director.

It Always Rains on Sunday
Time Frames Matinees

Directed by Robert Hamer for Ealing Studios, It Always Rains on Sunday is a gem of post-war British cinema. This tense domestic noir follows Bethnal Green housewife Rose Sandigate through one wet Sunday as her old flame unexpectedly appears seeking help after escaping from prison. A forerunner to kitchen sink dramas of the 1960s, this slice of life in the East End features an outstanding performance from Googie Withers as a woman trapped in stifling domesticity. This film screens as part of an afternoon of ‘Sunday’ films at the Hyde Park Picture House.

‘Hamer shows people trapped in situations where their family and community and daily life have already had passion... drained out of them: it forces its way back, but in distorted and destructive forms, and there is no alternative but to stamp it out. Hamer is the Ealing director most aware of the loss, and he makes us feel it acutely, especially in It Always Rains on Sunday.’ Charles Barr, Ealing Studios.

Three friends from a Parisian ghetto spend a day and night together in the aftermath of a riot. Vinz is a vengeful skinhead who has acquired a police firearm. Hubert is a boxer who hopes for a better life. Said occupies the middle ground between his pals’ responses to their mutual plight - all three are on the receiving end of institutionalised racism. Travelling from the blighted out suburbs to the central city and back again, La Haine describes multicultural Paris of 1995 with a massive amount of vigour, wit, anger and passion.

‘La Haine was such a phenomenon by itself, which I’m not really responsible for. It was the right time, the right moment. Movies like that come along very seldomly, you cannot do it again. If it was just my genius then I would have done it again, but I can’t do it again. I could have done La Haine two… but I like to try different things...’ Mathieu Kassovitz, Director.

La Notte
Time Frames Night Shifts

Michelangelo Antonioni's devastating portrait of a deteriorating marriage, set against the desolate cityscape of Milan. Sitting between L'Avventura and L'Eclisse in Antonioni's trilogy on bourgeois alienation, La Notte chronicles a day and night in the life of unhappy couple Giovanni and Lidia, played by giants of cinema Marcello Mastroianni and Jeanne Moreau. Drifting through the evening, they visit a dying friend in hospital, attend a book launch, and end up at a lavish party where Giovanni attempts to seduce the host's daughter (Monica Vitti). La Notte is a haunting study of romantic ennui.

"With La Notte I will arrive at one result of compromise; the compromise that is found today in morality and even in politics. The characters this time find themselves, but they have trouble in communicating because they have discovered that the truth is difficult, that it demands great courage and decision, impossible to achieve in their way of life." Le Mans
Time Frames Action!

A heads up on the background story in Le Mans, it’s not great, but it’s the remarkable front and centre racing action that is the main attraction and you'll feel all the revs roaring inside the concert hall setting of Leeds Town Hall. 24 Hours of Le Mans is the world’s most famous endurance race and Steve McQueen's passion project went to extraordinary lengths to bring all the thrills and spills of the experience to the big screen. Over 1 million feet of racing footage was captured by 20 camera crews including breathtaking in-car shots.

"He went mad in a way: he was trying to create perfection, [but] there was no real rhythm, and no one in the editing room could make sense of it all. He was trying to evoke the smell of car racing and capture moments of its purity. This became an obsession and that is what caused everything else to fall by the wayside." Magnolia
Time Frames Matinees

A sprawling, ambitious epic of intersecting lives, coincidence, love and the search for meaning on a single day in the San Fernando Valley. The to-die-for ensemble cast features Philip Seymour Hoffman as a careworn nurse, Julianne Moore as a frustrated trophy wife, John C. Reilly as a dim-bulb cop, and most memorably Tom Cruise as a monstrous misogynist guru. An operatic quality pervades events, which are seemingly separate yet in fact connected by Paul Thomas Anderson’s intricate screenplay. Magnolia is a gloriously over-reaching popular art movie that frequently breaks through into transcendence.

‘I thought it would be really interesting to put this epic spin on topics that don’t necessarily get the epic treatment, which is usually reserved for war movies or political topics. But the things that I know as big and emotional are these real intimate everyday moments, like losing your car keys, for example. You could start with something like that and go anywhere.’ Paul Thomas Anderson, Director.

Miracle Mile
Time Frames Action!

Harry (Anthony Edwards of Top Gun and ER fame) meets and falls in love with a young woman at the La Brea Tar Pits in LA. After missing a date he tries to call her but accidentally intercepts a clandestine phone call, telling him that a nuclear war has started. Harry has 70 minutes to find his girlfriend and escape LA before the missiles hit. Steve De Jarnatt’s cult post-apocalyptic drama celebrates its 30th anniversary this year and its bleak cold-war message, seemingly improbable for the last two decades, suddenly feels relevant again.

‘I guess today people think the world is going to end from economic collapse or terrorism or something like that, but all those pale in comparison to the nuke threat of the Cold War. You had it drummed into you that you had to duck, roll and cover, and that we were going to be at war. We were going to brush the radioactive dust off the cans and live to fight the Russians again some day.’ Steve de Jarnatt, Director.

THE MOMENT
Time Frames Installation

In a war of the mind, how do you rebel when your thoughts are monitored? The MOMENT is a ‘brain controlled’ dystopian sci-fi following three interlinking stories. Directed by artist and researcher Richard Ramchurn, it uses a Neurosky Headset to detect EEG brainwaves to affect the edit, sound mix and narrative of a specially created movie. There are over 18 billion different narrative combinations of the film and each screening is unique. The MOMENT is screened in an intimate Mobile Cinema inside a converted caravan seating up to six audience members and one controller.

‘I’m looking into the technology in brain-computer interfaces, and a lot of large tech companies, google for example, are really trying to push the boundaries of these brain computer interfaces. So I wanted to make a story about how that technology could be developed with the current issues we’re having in the world. So it’s a speculative fiction piece.’ Richard Ramchurn, Director.

Night on Earth was Jim Jarmusch’s fifth feature, made in 1991 in his trademark deadpan style, a spellbinding portmanteau film encompassing five stories in five different taxi cabs during one night. A sparkling cast of scene stealing cameos includes Winona Ryder, Giancarlo Esposito, Armin Mueller-Stahl, Beatrice Dalle and Roberto Benigni, who enlighten a set of perfectly wrought and wittily written little stories set in New York, Los Angeles, Paris, Helsinki and Rome, all tied together by an atmospheric score by the great Tom Waits.

‘The dynamics of that small space in the different cabs… it was really complicated to shoot that way. To be confined and working in a car that way, which is like working in miniature. We felt like we were working with toy trains after a while rather that a full size city. But it was a real change for me to have a lot of close-ups and use the faces of the actors.’ Jim Jarmusch, Director.

Night Train
Time Frames Night Shifts

An underrated classic and one of the greatest Polish films of all time, Night Train takes place entirely in a single compartment on a crowded overnight train. Beginning like a Hitchcock thriller hinting at the possibility that someone in the carriage is a killer on the run, the film develops into a nuanced character study of the different passengers on board, building towards a complex and symbolic conclusion. A terrific cast includes Zbigniew Cybulski (the ‘Polish James Dean’) and Leon Niemczyk (Knife in the Water), and composer Andrzej Trzaskowski contributes an atmospheric jazz score.

‘The film was made at the time of the post-Stalinist thaw in Poland, when artists could produce art that wasn’t party-line jingoism; Night Train is a subtle examination of both the lingering trauma of the war and the fact that Communism hasn’t offered a redemptive or meaningful way of being.’ A.G. Khandros, East European Film Bulletin.

Odd Man Out
Time Frames Matinees

Set against a backdrop of political unrest in Northern Ireland, Carol Reed’s compelling post-war noir stars James Mason as Irish Revolutionist Johnny McQueen, stranded on the streets of an unnamed Belfast after killing a man in a robbery gone wrong. Working with cinematographer Robert Krasker, with whom he would go on to make The Third Man, Reed conjures a dark and unyielding urban landscape with a diverse cast of characters, as Johnny makes his journey from one end of the city to the other in the course of a night. As Johnny’s evening unravels, the manhunt closes in.

‘Reed developed his signature vision of the city at night: misty shafts of light probing pools of blackness, bricks and cobblestones glistening with rain, gigantic shadows moving across walls, long alleys tunneling into the screen, desolate squares dotted with the tiny figures of children. While undeniably noir, Reed’s urban nightscapes are never entirely hostile; moments of compassion and humanity gleam amid callousness and betrayal, like lighted windows on dark streets.’ Imogen Sara Smith, Criterion.
Reservoir Dogs
Time Frames
Breakfast Screening

Immediately following a disastrous jewellery heist, six colour-coded criminals (‘Mr Blonde’, ‘Mr Pink’ and so on) reconvene at a warehouse for a few hours to talk out the aftermath. Quentin Tarantino’s first film served up a medley of smart international influences - from French New Wave to Hong Kong action cinema - to change U.S. indie cinema in profound and bloody ways. But Reservoir Dogs’ energy - which is lent by a barnstorming ensemble cast - is very much its own. The sheer jolt that Reservoir Dogs gave popular cinema in 1992 was enormous, and is still being felt.

‘I actually think that if movies were to follow closer the rules for novels, they would benefit, in the transition from novels to movies, one of the first things that goes is the structure… I like deciding what I’m gonna reveal and when I’m gonna reveal it, I think a certain suspense comes from that. I don’t know if you’re confused in Reservoir Dogs, but you’re curious.’ Quentin Tarantino, Director.

Run Lola Run
Time Frames Action!

Tom Tykwer’s iconic and hugely enjoyable film of the late 90s, is an exhilarating race against the clock that plays with time and fate. The film runs through three different versions of the same 20 minutes as Lola tries to get a large sum of money to her boyfriend before he resorts to desperate measures. Infused with the look and narrative logic of video games, Tykwer blends the elements of a straightforward action thriller with experimental visual techniques, a relentless techno soundtrack, and an incredible energy that pushes past genre limits.

‘Run Lola Run is a film about a person bursting with passionate energy, so it has to be a film that bursts out with passionate energy. I always try to translate the emotional state of people into film language. So the right translation for this character and this story was to make it a frenetic, energetic, fast film.’ Tom Tykwer, Director.
Sound & Fury’s Charlie Ward
Time Frames Installation

Sound & Fury’s intimate, immersive and powerful sound installation Charlie Ward places audiences in the heart of a makeshift wartime hospital where an unlikely therapy brings solace and comfort to those injured in the battlefield. Cast from the trenches to childhood, from trauma to dreams, the hospital film show sets one soldier on a journey into a personal no man’s land. Co-commissioned by 14 - 18 NOW and Fuel. Booking advised, 10 places per session.

‘Running at 15 minutes, it’s fleeting and dreamlike but like the most arresting dreams, it lingers in the mind long after waking up.’ (The Guardian).

“We set about watching a lot of early Charlie Chaplin films and reading about the hospital experience for the war wounded. We learned that pictures of Chaplin were shown to the brain damaged to see if they recognised his face, that Wilfred Owen and Siegfried Sassoon mentioned the little tramp in their letters and drew comparisons between him and the spirit of the indomitable ordinary soldier.’ Mark Espiner, Sound & Fury Co-founder

Squandered Sunday
Time Frames Matinees

Banned for many years due to political reasons, Drahomiřa Vihanová’s existential debut feature is one of the darkest films to emerge from the Czech New Wave. The film follows disillusioned army officer Arnošt, as he spends a lethargic Sunday after waking up with a hangover. Stuck living on a remote military barracks, Arnošt alleviates his feelings of boredom by drinking or retreating into daydreams and nostalgia. Squandered Sunday is an indelible portrait of a man overcome by the banality of his existence, and a powerful political allegory for Czechoslovakia after the Prague Spring was crushed.

‘Had Vihanová made Squandered Sunday earlier in the 1960s, her film would have been released and she would be better known… She wasn’t allowed to make feature films during the next 20 years... According to the authorities, Squandered Sunday was too pessimistic and avant-garde in its approach. Above all, critical and avant-garde films were seen to be subversive and a threat to the neo-Stalinist regime.’ Peter Hames.

On 22 July 2011 more than 500 young people attending a summer camp on the island of Utøya in Norway were attacked by heavily armed right-wing extremist Anders Behring Breivik whose murderous attack claimed the lives of 69 victims. Director Erik Poppe’s breathless single-take re-enactment of the events on the island is told entirely from the desperate perspective of 18-year-old Kaja and her friends as the unknown assassin gets closer and closer. ‘A visceral, brutal, yet heartfelt and earnest movie, which imbues the innocent bewilderment and horror of its young characters.’ (The Guardian).

‘The idea was to try to… understand and experience this from another point of view than what we’re used to seeing in films. I hoped that after all the speculation and stories around the shootings, we could bring the story and ownership of 22 July back to the victims by making a film focusing on the point of view of the young people who were out there on the island.’ Erik Poppe, Director.
Winner of the Grand Prix for Best Film at the 1958 Berlin Film Festival, Bergman’s exploration of time, regret and the possibility of reconciliation remains one of his most influential and compassionate films. On a day-long car journey punctuated by chance meetings with strangers, emotionally distant professor Isak Borg (played by director Victor Sjöström, whose The Phantom Carriage was a defining influence on Bergman) travels into his own past, dreams and nightmares, towards a greater understanding of his life and those around him.

“Borrowing my father’s form, he occupied my soul and made it all his own - there wasn’t even a crumb left over for me! He did so with the sovereign power of a gargantuan personality. I had nothing to add, not even a sensible or irrational comment. Wild Strawberries was no longer my film; it was Victor Sjöström’s!” Ingmar Bergman, Director.
